

Evil Interfaces: Violating the User

Greg Conti
gregory-conti@usma.edu

West Point, New York

A photograph of a prison cell interior. In the center, there are metal bunk beds with two levels, each having a mattress and a pillow. To the left of the bunk beds is a toilet. To the right is a wooden door. The walls are light-colored, and there is a window with vertical bars above the bunk beds. The floor is a light-colored tile.

The views expressed in this presentation are those of the author and do not reflect the official policy or position of the United States Military Academy, the Department of the Army, the Department of Defense or the U.S. Government.

In an Ideal World Interfaces...

- aid efficiency
- reduce task completion time
- reduce errors
- easy to learn
- and are satisfying to use

Evil Interfaces

“Evil interfaces are deliberately malicious, often designed to mislead or trick, and act counter to the goals of the user in an adversarial relationship”

Not bad design...

The Problem is Evolving...

Motivators

- Profit
 - Make sales
 - Register software
 - Advertising revenue
 - Protect IP
- Brand recognition
 - including political candidates
- Disclose Information
- (Sick) Humor
- Legal

Your definition of “evil” may vary

Attacker's Problem

- Users aren't paying attention to advertisements.
- "Generation MySpace is Getting Fed Up"
- Banner Ad Blindness
- Occurs on and off desktop
- Attacker's solution... Evil Interfaces

So What?

- The problem is ubiquitous
- Minimal countermeasures exist
- This is a hard problem
- Raising awareness increases resistance

Outline

- Measuring evil

Threat Model

- Attacker is often designer of interface
 - or Third-parties able to influence interface
 - sources of embedded content
 - ISPs
- Assets: user's time, attention, and money
- Environment: Problem exists everywhere. Gas stations, casinos, grocery stores, software, hardware, the web.

Taxonomy of Evil Usability

- Attention
 - Attract
 - Avoid
 - Demand
- Error Exploitation
- Work
- Deceive

What does the company offer?
DLP appliances designed to protect customer information and safeguard intellectual property.

Why is it worth watching? The company recently released a modestly priced appliance targeted at small-to-midsize businesses (SMB) and branch offices. In contrast, most vendors focus on large enterprises, giving Code Green a solid niche in

Your Rights Online: Bezos Buries Patent Office in Paper

Posted by CmdeTara on Monday, June 16, @09:13AM from the it's-hard-standing-by-your-word dept.

theoldp writes

"On June 2nd, almost two-and-a-half years after the USPTO initiated a reexamination of Amazon CEO Jeff Bezos' 1-Click Patent, Amazon dumped another load of documents on the USPTO Examiner assigned to the case, asking for consideration of the 165 or so listed references and favorable action." Peter Cakelley, the LOTR actor whose do-it-yourself legal effort prompted the reexam, notes that he was cc'd on 20 kb of documents that Amazon sent earlier to the USPTO as it tried to stave off last October's nominal rejection of all but 5 of Amazon's 26 1-Click patent claims. So much for Bezos' 2000 pledge of less work for the overworked Patent and Trademark Office."

- The HTTP request is invalid: The response is 400 (Bad Request)
 - It is originating locally
 - There is no User-Agent identification string
 - It cannot be a cron job. Those requests are usually scheduled.
- There might be a distance of 10 miles between the server and the client.
It might be a sequence of 3 in a row, but not necessarily. Examples of such connections:
- 12:57:18, 19, 20
13:07:23, 24, 25
13:17:26, 27, 28
17:25:23, 26

19:13:41, 42, ... every second until 19:14:15
So it actually can't be a cron job.

When Paypal originally announced the scheme it was to be global, but they began with a dry run in Australia to test the reaction of government and consumer authorities. In the public reaction that followed between eBay and the regulators, eBay spammed users claiming it was fighting for 'safety benefits for consumers.' Fortunately the constant pressure from president Simon Smith, 'While we disagree with the ACCC's draft notice, we have decided to withdraw the notification to stop any further confusion and disruption among the eBay community.' Nevertheless eBay insists PayPal is now always offered as a payment option. Have big corporations finally learned that they can go to far? More chillingly, if eBay had launched the scheme in America would they have got away with it?"

Google code hides IM secrets

Is instant messaging next on the agenda?

By Stefanie Olsen

Published: 18 October 2004 08:50 GMT

Google watchers abuzz about the search darling's new desktop tool are already betting on its next product: instant chat.

Such speculation isn't new but it's gained legs as some intriguing facts have come to light this week. First, although few people seem to realise it, Google already owns an instant-messaging (IM) client called Hello that it picked up this summer with its acquisition of photo-sharing service Picasa.

Meanwhile, code uncovered in the Google Desktop Search tool released on Tuesday suggests that the company may have broader plans to integrate IM into its growing list of products.

Richard Smith, a well-known security consultant, said he examined the code in the desktop application and found included in the program files a new protocol: "google_im://". (A protocol allows desktop software to interact with the web browser.) "This is a good sign there's an IM client," he said.

A Google representative said the protocol flagged by Smith does not hint at a pending Google IM product; rather, it is

Reminders to Protect your Computing Environment

Hackers, spammers and virus instigators continuously build new ways to attack computers, so it's important to check you security regularly. Here are a few simple questions:

- Have you protected yourself against virus, spyware, and identity theft threats?
- Have you installed the most recent service packs for your operating system and other software?
- Are you running the most recent version of ZoneAlarm?

ZoneAlarm provides a variety of security options that you can add on to your existing free ZoneAlarm firewall, including anti-virus, anti-spyware, and identity theft protection. Would you like to learn more?

Question

Michael,

For years, when I opened up PowerPoint, I got each document in a separate window making it easy to cut/paste slides from one to another while viewing both on my dual screens. Now, for some reason it burped. Multiple document are now only visible in one PowerPoint window. How do I change this back? (BTW, I always thought that Excel was clunky because it always did this one-window thing. Maybe, it's just a setting that needs to be changed.) MW Word still operates in multiple windows.

Thanks for your time... I know this is probably a too-basic question, but I'm frustrated.

Bruce

Answer

Hi Bruce,

To open up your powerpoint in different windows open up 2 of your powerpoint presentations. Right now you see it in one window that will all change.

1. Click tools>>Options.
2. In the view tab and under the category Show you will see something called windows in taskbar.
3. Make sure windows in taskbar is checked and click ok. Now you will see two powerpoint presentations in two seperate windows.

Excel: To open up different windows in excel it is the same procedure. Click tools>>Options and make sure windows in taskbar is checked off. :)

I know it can be frustrating in time but dont worry I will always be here to help.

Google Watch. The most recent buzz over Google was centered around various rumors that the company would make dumb terminals, its own operating system, or a mesh network, light up dark fiber all over the country, and (get this) finance the "space elevator." You have to wonder how much of this is simply Google jerking the chain of the computer industry simply because it can.

I'm convinced that many of these rumors are a smokescreen for the one important idea on the laundry list: lighting up the dark fiber that permeates the United States. Hear me out on this one.

If you've followed the implementation and laying of fiber optics, you know that most of it lies in the ground unused. This is the result of an invention called WDM or wave-division multiplexing. When fiber-optic transmission was first developed, most people pretty much used the light beam along a fiber to send data. Then it was discovered that the one light beam on one fiber could be multiplexed, based on the color spectrum. The capacity of the system was immediately increased by 16X. This invention came relatively late in the game, after a lot of fiber was already trenched out and buried. That fiber immediately became redundant, and it sits in the ground today as dark fiber—unused.

Most of the dark fiber is owned by local and state utilities and various holding companies. It would make sense for Google to begin to buy it up and become a major backbone company itself.

The Google executives can see the same states there is a slow consolidation of telecommunications services, as the once-shattered AT&T monopoly is slowly re-forming, much like the unstoppable liquid-metal robot-assassin in Terminator 2. Eventually the telcos, along with Comcast, will own all access to the Net, and they've already made their intentions clear: no free rides for anyone doing business online. If

Google Talk Opens to Other IM Services

By Nate Mook, BetaNews
January 17, 2006, 3:36 PM

Google on Tuesday announced it was opening up Google Talk to networks that utilize the XMPP protocol, developed for Jabber. The Google users can communicate directly with users of Earthlink, Comcast, Netease, Chikka, MediaRing and others.

Any IM provider is now free to connect to Google Talk without any by following the specifications. Google eventually plans to add support for cross-network calling as well. "We think this is pretty exciting," product manager Mike Jazayeri, "and we hope it will bring us one step closer to making Internet voice calling as ubiquitous as email."

Some oddball facts that emerged from the experiment are that fake Chase.com was the most common phishing e-mail spotted during the project, and that the British volunteers received the most Nigerian scam e-mail.

In addition to Mooney, the other S.P.A.M. participants also kept a blog about the experience, which some found amusing and others disturbing. One participant in Australia named Mari wrote, "I don't know whether I would feel safe to surf to that extent again. I tried to sign up for jobs that would generate an at-home income with what seemed like respectable sites, however these sites led to massive amounts of spam."

Buried Landmines

The image is a screenshot of a Yahoo! Finance webpage from 2008, featuring an article titled "Finding a Place That Fits your Retirement Lifestyle". The article is by Jay MacDonald, dated Friday, July 11, 2008, and is provided by Bankrate.com. The article discusses the challenges of finding a retirement spot and mentions Barbara Corcoran's book "Nextville".

Red annotations highlight specific text in the article:

- A red box highlights the phrase "makes them so special" in the sentence: "It's the mix of retirement priorities that makes them so special."
- A red box highlights the phrase "retirement priorities" in the same sentence.
- A red box highlights the phrase "retirement priorities" in the sentence: "Whether you're looking for a retirement spot in Florida to a tree house or a penthouse in Panama, these options are worlds away from Golden Pond."
- A red box highlights the phrase "retirement priorities" in the sentence: "Bankrate caught up with Corcoran by phone at her own country refuge on Fire Island, N.Y., for a chat about boomers facing the back nine."
- A red box highlights the phrase "retirement priorities" in the sentence: "Q: You urge those approaching retirement to 'think outside the hammock.' What do you mean by that?"
- A red box highlights the phrase "retirement priorities" in the sentence: "A: Years ago, people thought of retirement as leisure time. You left your 9-to-5 job and all the pressures of life. Their dream was to have nothing to do. Well, it just took a few people retiring with nothing to do to straighten that concept out. 'Think outside the hammock' really means think past whether you're going to enjoy the prettiness of a place and focus more on what you're going to do when you get there, because retirement today is a lot more about doing than just being. That's a total shift in mind-set."

At the bottom of the page, there is a "Loan Type" section with a list of loan options:

- 30 Year Fixed
- 15 Year Fixed
- 1 Year ARM
- 30 Year Fixed Jumbo
- 5/1 ARM
- 3/1 ARM

The Next 25 Years in Tech

PCs may disappear from your desk by 2033. But with digital technology showing up everywhere else--including inside your body--computing will only get more personal.

25 YEARS OF PCWorld

Artwork: Chip Taylor

The future ain't what it used to be. Personal jetpacks and taking on anyone's radar.

Now the technology landscape will be vastly more powerful and the rest of our life begins.

Technology will become firm information and entertainment to our homes and environment from within the walls and floors of our augment reality inside our bodies.

This shiny happy future world will come at a cost. Let's hope that our jetpacks come with seat belts.

For a look at the current status of some predictions made in old science-fiction films and TV shows, check out our slide show, "Five Sci-Fi Scenarios That Will Come True."

The Incredible Disappearing PC

Whether you have a PC on your desk in 10 to 15 years will be a matter of choice, not necessity. If you do, it will be vastly more powerful than your current system, thanks to advances in nanotechnology, says Doug Tougaw, an engineering professor at Valparaiso University who is developing nanocomputers.

"We're getting closer to our goal of creating computers that are a thousand times faster and smaller and use one-thousandth of the energy of today's computers," Tougaw reports. "As processors get smaller, they'll be embedded into more things. We'll also use standard-size machines packed with hundreds of chips. So we'll have very intelligent consumer products and unbelievably powerful PCs."

Computers using nanotechnology will debut in about five years, he says. Five to ten years after that, silicon will reach a point at which quantum mechanics won't allow chip pathways to get any smaller, so electric-current-based PCs will give way to optical computers that transmit streams of light instead of electrons, or stop checking purses and laptop bags came as a surprise to several Dallas police officers who said they believed it was a lapse in security.

Dallas Deputy Police Chief T.W. Lawrence, head of the Police Department's homeland security and special operations divisions, said the order -- apparently made by the U.S. Secret Service -- was meant to speed up the long lines outside and fill the arena's vacant seats before Obama came on.

"Sure," said Lawrence, when asked if he was concerned by the great number of people who had gotten into the building without being checked. But, he added, the turnout of more than 17,000 people seemed to be a "friendly crowd."

The Secret Service did not return a call from the

Developers: Microsoft Releases First Open XML SDK

Posted by Seulskill on Friday, June 13, @10:14PM from the appeals-what-appeals dept.

Kurtz'sKornputer tips us to news that Microsoft has released a finished version of the Open XML software development kit. Microsoft has made additional resources available with the download.

Quoting Techworld:

"The SDK includes an application programming interface (API) simplifying the creation of code for searching documents, creating documents, validating document parts, modifying data and other tasks, Microsoft said. The API can be used in any language supported by the Microsoft .Net Framework, the company said. The current SDK supports the version of Open XML supported by Office 2007, which is not the same as that ratified as a standard by the ISO, due to changes effected during the ratification process."

Google: Resistance is Futile

By David Needle

Reporter's Notebook: The late, great science fiction writer Frank Herbert wrote a book for neophyte computer users in the 1980s called Without Me You're Nothing. The title referred to the fact that, for all its technical smarts, a personal computer needed a human operator to accomplish anything.

Point taken.

But in the 21st century it's the Internet that drives much of what we use a PC for. So instead of Herbert's title for today's computer users, how about Without Us You're Nothing?

The "you're" in this case refers to Google and its competitors in the search engine game.

REALLY, REALLY BIG.
