CH ONE

Dear Reader:

Welcome to the 32nd Edition of P ll.

Since our last issue, several n sasters ravaged our nation, and most specifically, Southern California and th . To the victims we extend our deepest sympathy. Once again, professionals and nteers in the Public Safety sector rose to the occasion. Many came from outside of e areas so hard hit. They did not wait to be asked: They called and said, "We're on the way, where do you want us?" To those firefighters, law enforcement officers and medics, this is our very personal "THANK YOU!"

We'll say it again. Disaster can strike anywhere and any time. Be prepared!

What's new in this Edition? Parts I and II have been updated right to press time. We've added a glossary of Abbreviations, Slang and Terminology. You'll find it just after Codes and Signals. Our exclusive Combined Frequency List, and the sections on Government, Railroads and Aircraft have been revised and expanded. More Codes and Signals have been added. Highway Maintenance Radio Service (Service Code "R") records are now complete. Unlicensed stations continue to be a problem for us, but we believe we have found a way to add some of these to our records.

We have to confess to a problem in the 1994 Edition. The FCC had created a new radio service, the Emergency Medical Radio Service, which we designated with the Service Code "M." For reasons too complicated to explain, no records in this new service (a couple of hundred) appeared in the 1994 Police Call. Terry Weatherford, Jr., of Springfield (IL) was the first to call the omission to our attention, and the problem has been corrected.

If numbers interest you, here are some (rounded off) for Police Call:

- 325,000 records.
- 25,000 added items of information not available from FCC licenses.
- 15,000 codes and signals.
- 4,500 (average per volume) frequencies and band-ranges in the Combined Frequency List.

As always, we welcome your letters. Most of those 25,000 items of information came from you readers. If you would like to become a Major Contributor, let us know. We'll tell you how.

If you have a question, remember our rule: You must enclose a self-addressed and stamped envelope. No SASE, no answer! And please, don't ask a question unless you are sure the answer isn't to be found in these pages: Read before you write! Also, be patient. We can't always answer as quickly as we would like to.

As reader Raymond Viohl, of Coopersburg (PA) put it:

We wish you blue skies and green lights!

Gene Hughes

P.S. LAST MINUTE NOTE. The FCC is installing a new computer system, which has caused a backlog in issuing new licenses. This has resulted in problems for some Public Safety agencies waiting for licenses (for example, Metro Dade County Police). To alleviate the situation, the FCC has issued a number of "Special Temporary Authorizations" in place of licenses. Thanks to a special effort by our staff in Gettysburg (home of the FCC), we have been able to include these in this edition of Police Call.

RADIO CLUBS

The Association of North American Radio Clubs (ANARC) was founded in 1964 as a uniting organization for non-profit radio listening clubs in North America. All ANARC member clubs are reliable, responsible volunteer organizations.

ANARC's objectives are to promote closer ties among radio clubs, to promote the interchange of information and ideas among member clubs, to work for the common good of listeners, and to provide a medium to speak out for radio clubs and listeners in North America.

The various clubs that are members of ANARC specialize in differing interests. Most have regular publications for members. For information, please write directly to the clubs. These clubs are run by volunteers on limited budgets, so please include a self-addressed and stamped envelope when writing to them. And, allow plenty of time for an answer.

Two of the clubs specialize in the Public Safety frequencies listed in POLICE CALL. Both publish big news bulletins filled with frequency information, technical tips, etc.

LISTENER'S GUIDE BOOK

1. INTRODUCTION

If you think you know all there is to know about scanning, answer these questions:

- What is the difference between "multicasting" and simulcasting?"
- How far is "line-of-sight?"
- What is the difference between "message trunking" and "transmission trunking?"

The Listener's Guide Book is packed with information to help you get the most out of using your scanner. If you are a newcomer, you should read the entire Guide. If you are an experienced user, we suggest you review chapters 2 and 4–12, since new material has been added since last year.

New and revised information is indicated by two asterisks ().

If you believe that we've made an error in substance, or left something out, please let us know. We're always delighted to receive comments from readers. We'll be glad to answer when we can, but only if you enclose a self-addressed and stamped envelope.

Scanning: What is it all about?

Millions of Americans watch the news on TV, listen to it on radio, and read about it in the newspaper. As efficient as they are, the media are only reporting what's history. On a rare occasion, TV might bring an unusual event to you live. With your scanner, you will hear the local news as it happens: Lives being saved, criminals being apprehended and fires being suppressed. It's the real life drama, not a script writer's version. And you've got a front row seat to all the action.

Scanner listeners have aided law enforcement agencies on many occasions, providing them with extra eyes (one caution: never, never do anything more than report your information to the proper authorities).

Listeners with special interests may follow aircraft as they crisscross the skies, or trains shuttling their cargoes about the nation. You can tune in live action, any time of day or night. It never ends.

Monitoring may also present a technical challenge. Discover how your radio reception can be improved by experimenting.

Lastly, through clubs and bulletin boards, you have the opportunity to communicate with other people who have the same interests as yours.

Join A Club

If monitoring is, or is going to be your hobby, we urge you to consider the clubs listed in this book. Select one of the non-profit clubs that best fits your interests, and join now! Don't put it off.

Are we pushing club membership? Absolutely! Each year, we receive hundreds of letters asking questions that tell us readers want to know more about monitoring. The club members and their publications are a treasury of information, but you can't get it unless you join. There are many computer bulletin boards devoted to scanning. Again, the clubs can help you find one in your area.

Radio Emergency Associated Communications Teams (REACT)

REACT is a volunteer, non-profit organization whose primary purpose is to assist motorists. REACT members also provide traffic information for radio-TV stations and maintain contact with other facilities such as the American Red Cross, Weather Bureau and public safety agencies. REACT frequently provides communications facilities, as a community service, at public events such as marathons, parades, and air shows.

REACT was started in 1962 by volunteers who monitored the Citizens Band. While members still monitor and use CB, communications in most parts of the country are via UHF radio on 462.675 MHz, a GMRS channel that requires no test to obtain an operating license. Many REACT members are also licensed amateurs. REACT is organized into local Teams and Councils throughout the country. REACT offers its members a number of benefits, including a bi-monthly magazine and ID card.

Readers who may be interested in becoming a part of this community-oriented program are encouraged to write to: REACT International Inc., P.O. Box 998, Wichita, KS 67201. Phone (800) 99-REACT.

2. MONITORING AND THE LAW

Whether you listen as a hobby, as part of your volunteer work or in your occupation, you should be aware that there are strict Federal laws governing this activity. The rules are spelled out in the Communications Act of 1934 and the Electronic Communications Privacy Act (ECPA) of 1986. The Federal Communications Commission maintains a staff of investigators throughout the country, and the FBI is also empowered to investigate violations and make arrests when warranted. The laws provide for monetary fines and/or prison sentences of as long as ten years.

Regarding radio transmissions that you hear, it is against the Federal law to:

- Reveal to any other person, not a party to the transmissions, the contents of those transmissions (in other words, keep it to yourself).
- Use any information heard to aid in committing a crime.
- Use any information heard for personal gain.

Federal law makes it a crime to intentionally intercept the following types of radio transmissions:

- Remote radio-TV broadcast pickups.
- Scrambled, encrypted or coded transmissions.
- Mobile telephone conversations of any type.

Your state and/or local community may have laws restricting the use of scanners under certain conditions.

Failure to obey them could result in a monetary fine and/or having your scanner confiscated. Several states have enacted laws prohibiting the interception of cordless telephone conversations.

Under local and state laws, you may be arrested for interfering with an official performing his or her duty. In many communities, it is a misdemeanor (punishable by a fine and/or jail), to "sight-see" at the scene of an emergency. Unless it is your job to be there, stay away from the scene of an emergency. Experienced listeners know that you will learn more by listening to your radio than by being there.

3. RADIO FOR BEGINNERS

A number of shortcuts have been taken to avoid being too technical:

- Numbers are rounded off when precision is not important. We know, for example, that the speed of light is 186,282.3976 miles per second, but we'll use 186,000 mps.
- Non-existent and hypothetical devices are used to illustrate points, as are some crude comparisons.
- We'll ask you to take our word for certain things, rather than getting you bogged down in complicated details. Hobby organizations, such as Radio Communications Monitoring Association (RCMA) and All Ohio Scanner Club publish fine articles on the many aspects of monitoring.
- Math is kept to a minimum: Mostly, plain addition, subtraction and multiplication. You may wish to keep paper and pencil handy so you can follow along.

Key words are in bold letters the first time they are used.

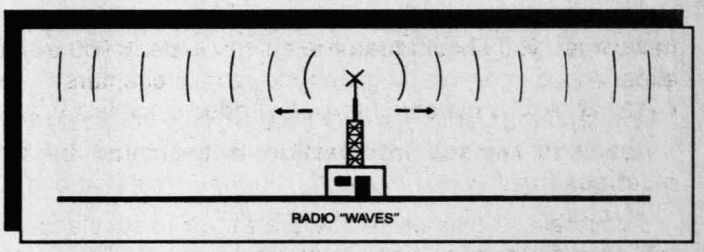
Frequency vs. Wavelength

When any mechanical or electrical action is repeated over and over again, each separate action is called a cycle. A bicycle wheel going around one time completes one cycle: The moon going around the earth one time completes one cycle.

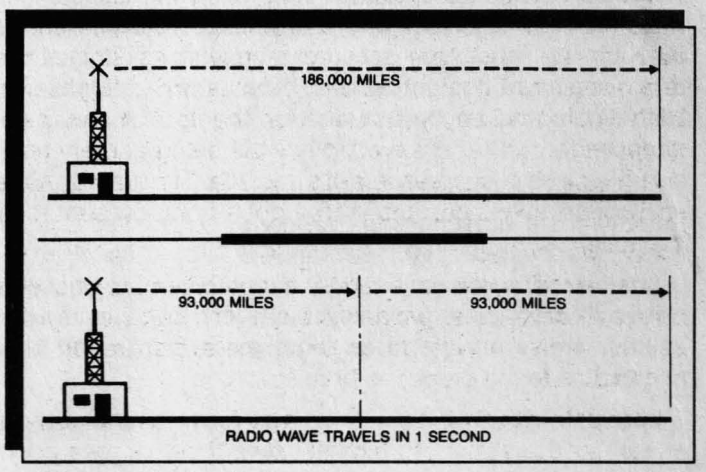
A cycle, by itself, may not tell you much. If all you know is that a bicycle wheel has gone around 30 times, what have you learned? Adding the element of time yields useful information. The complete formula would be: How many cycles in how much time? That's called frequency. The moon travels around the earth at a frequency of just over 12 cycles per year. The engine of an idling car may turn at a frequency of 1200 cycles (revolutions) per minute.

Sound consists of repetitive air vibrations. The faster the vibrations, the higher the tone. Human beings can hear sounds with frequencies from about 50 cycles per second (cps) to about 20,000 cps. The frequencies we are able to hear are called audio frequencies (AF).

Radio signals are composed of repeating waves of electromagnetic energy. Their frequency is so high that they have to be expressed in kilocycles (thousands of cycles) or megacycles (millions of cycles) per second. About 20 years ago, it was decided to substitute Hertz (Hz) for "cycles per second," honoring Heinrich Hertz, a 19th century physicist who pioneered the study of radio waves. There are abbreviations for kilohertz (KHz) and megahertz (MHz). To change KHz to MHz, just move the decimal point three (3) places to the left (<): 1000.0KHz = 1.0000MHz.



Drop a rock in a pond of water. The waves will radiate out in all directions. The measured distance from the top of one wave to the top of the next wave is the wavelength. Radio waves radiate out from a transmitting antenna the same way, but travel at a speed of 186,000 miles (about 300,000 kilometers) per second, the same as the speed of light.



Although we can't see radio waves, we can deductively figure out how long they are. Let's use an imaginary adjustable transmitter to do this. We'll set it to transmit just one Hertz (one cycle per second). The wave starts out at the beginning of the second and ends when the second is over. How long is the radio wave? The front end of the wave traveled 186,000 miles in that one second. The back end of the wave was just leaving the transmitter at the end of the second. The radio wave has to be 186,000 miles long.

Now lets transmit two Hertz (two cycles per second). At one-half second, the transmitter has finished sending wave #1 and started sending wave #2. Now how long is each wave? The front end of wave #1 went 186,000 miles. The back end of wave #2 was just leaving when the second was over. Two waves in 186,000 miles: each one is half that length, or 93,000 miles long.

Remember: the higher (greater) the frequency, the shorter the wave length.

No matter what radio frequency (how many waves per second) is transmitted, the length of all the waves sent in one second has to add up to 186,000 miles (300,000 kilometers): No more and no less, because that's the distance traveled by the front of the first wave. Now, using a bit of math (don't let the zeros scare you — they just take up a lot of paper), you can go back and forth between frequency and wavelength. All you have to remember is the number "300."

By convention, wavelength is expressed in meters (A meter is 39.37 inches, or a little more than one yard). If you know the frequency, divide 300 by the frequency in MHz to get the wavelength in meters. If you know the wavelength in meters, divide 300 by the wavelength to get the frequency in MHz.

- An amateur radio operator ("ham") says he broadcasts in the six-meter band. What is the frequency range? 300 divided by 6 = 50. The ham is operating just above 50 MHz.
- What's the approximate wavelength of a 150 MHz radio signal? 300 divided by 150 = 2. The wavelength is 2 meters (just over 6 feet).

Radio Bands

Your transistor broadcast receiver probably has two sets of numbers, or bands: AM and FM. The AM band goes from 540 KHz to 1710 KHz (0.540-1.710 MHz). The FM band is 88-108MHz. These are just two very small parts of the entire radio spectrum that stretches from about .050MHz to 20,000MHz and beyond. A dial for tuning it all would be miles long.

The radio spectrum is divided into many small bands: Entertainment broadcasting, television, ships-at-sea, short wave broadcast, amateur, aircraft, CB, etc. A few of these bands are set aside for two-way communications between offices, 2-way radio-equipped vehicles and portable Walkie-Talkies. These are the major land-mobile bands and their names:

- 30.000-50.000 MHz — Very High Frequency - low band (VHF-low)
- 138.000-174.000 MHz — Very High Frequency - high band (VHF-high)
- 406.000-470.000 MHz — Ultra High Frequency band (UHF)
- 470.000-512.000 MHz — Ultra High Frequency (UHF-T) in some cities
- 806.000-940.000 MHz — "800" band

In addition to the above, there is a 72-76MHz mid-band that is used for control and relay, low-power radios within a plant area, and remote control. It is not available in most scanners (in many parts of the world, 66-88MHz is used instead of 30-50MHz). The FCC has allocated the 220-222MHz band for land-mobile radio. However, it will be restricted to new technologies which are beyond the reception capabilities of current production scanners.

While not a land-mobile band, the aeronautical frequencies are of interest to those who want to monitor aircraft. The 108-137MHz band is used by civilian aircraft and is found in all but the most modestly priced scanners. The military aircraft band, 230-396MHz, is found only in top-of-the-line scanners.

 Not all scanners have every band installed. The 806-940 MHz bank is quickly becoming the most popular range for Public Safety radio, especialy since it includes frequencies for nationwide Mutual Aid between law enforcement agencies. However, under Federal Law, the frequency ranges 824-849 MHz and 869-894 must be deleted from all scanners imported to or manufactured in the United States.

Top-of-the-line scanners offer almost continuous coverage from 25 MHz to 1300 MHz, or even higher. In addition to the bands mentioned, these units can also receive FM broadcast stations and the sound portion of many TV channels. The instruction manual that is furnished with every new scanner will contain information on which bands are installed.

These are the wavelengths at the center of the most popular land-mobile bands:

- 40MHz = 7.5 meters (25 feet)
- 160MHz = 1.9 meters (6.2 feet)
- 460MHz = 0.65 meters (25 inches)
- 860MHz = 0.35 meters (14 inches)

Frequency characteristics

RANGE. In theory, the range of all the land-mobile bands is line-of-sight: from the bottom of the antenna to the horizon. It doesn't usually work that way, but it's a good place to start.

Here's a simple formula that will give you the approximate line-of-sight range of your antenna over level ground:

$$D = \sqrt{H} \times 1.4$$

When D = Distance to the horizon, in miles

H = Antenna height above ground, in feet

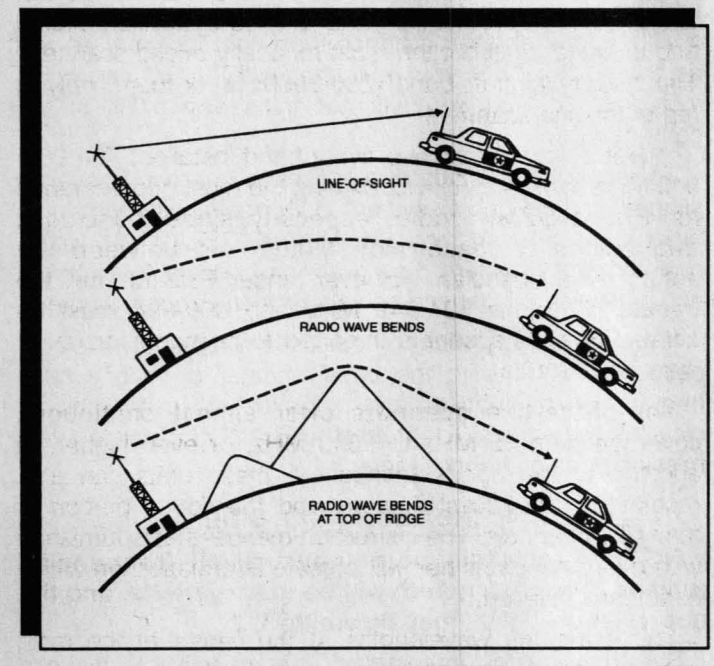
$\sqrt{H}$ = square root of antenna height

- Example: the bottom of your antenna is 25' above ground. The square root of 25' is 5'. 5 x 1.4 = 7 miles: the distance to the horizon.

If you want to determine the line-of-sight distance to another antenna (tower-mounted or on a car), you must also calculate its line-of-sight to the horizon and add the two together.

- Example: Your police department antenna is on a 100' tower. What is the maximum line-of-sight distance from your antenna to the police antenna? Their distance is 10 x 1.4 = 14 miles (the square root of 100 x 1.4). Add your antenna range (7 miles) to theirs (14 miles) and the total line-of-sight is 21 miles.

When calculating maximum range to a vehicle, add about 3 miles to your antenna line-of-sight range (for low band, add 6 miles). Over water, you can add 10 miles for the range to a boat.



Radio reception is not the same on all bands. Each has its advantages and drawbacks.

Radio waves are slightly bent over the horizon by the earth's atmosphere. Signals in the VHF-low band may travel as much as 30% beyond the horizon. The higher the frequency, the less bending there is, until there is almost none at 800 MHz. If all other factors are equal, the lower the frequency, the greater the range.

At the top of a sharp-crested hill, radio waves may be bent downward over the other side. This is the knife-edge effect. Atmospheric conditions may also affect range, most noticeably in the VHF-high band.

The wavelength determines where radio signals can and cannot be received. The lower the frequency (the longer the wavelength), the poorer reception will be inside steel structures. Higher frequencies have a tendency to be able to "bounce" off metallic objects, and thus reach into areas with large buildings. The very short wavelengths of UHF and the 800 MHz band may be stopped by such things as the leaves of trees — especially pine needles.

Many man-made devices create electrical noise that can interfere with radio signals: power lines, vehicles and machinery, for example. These noises decrease with increasing frequency.

Considering all the above, it is understandable why VHF-low is called the rural and suburban band. UHF and 800MHz are the first choice for use in metropolitan areas.

Frequency spacing

Look at the frequencies of stations in the FM broadcast band. You will notice that the number after the decimal is always an odd number (e.g., 91.1, 91.3, 91.5, etc.). Each frequency is 0.2 MHz away from the next one. This is frequency spacing and is done to avoid interference to one station by its neighbor, which would happen if they were too close together.

In the land-mobile bands, frequencies are much closer together. There is a different frequency spacing for each band. If you study the Consolidated Frequency List in the back of this book, you will notice a pattern of spacing for each band. In the VHF-high band, spacing is 0.015 MHz. If your local police department used 156.000MHz, another station on the same frequency would be a co-channel user. A station on 156.015 would be on the adjacent (next to) channel, and 156.030 would be the alternate (every other) channel.

Types of stations

A base (BAS) station transmits directly to mobiles and portables. If the base station is at some distance away from the operator, it is known as a remote base station. Remote base stations may be controlled over telephone lines, or by a separate radio known as a control station (CO), using one of the bands we have mentioned, or by microwave. The control station sends its signals only to the remote base station. The remote base station may have a radio transmitter to relay signals from mobiles back to the control station: this type of transmitter is known as a fixed relay.

A mobile (MOB) radio is one that is mounted in a vehicle that regularly moves from place to place. A portable radio is designed to be hand carried and moved around.

A radio channel is a communications path. It may use a single frequency, like a country bridge just wide enough for cars to go in one direction at a time. Or, a channel may consist of two frequencies, like a divided highway with separate lanes for each direction of travel.

Any group of radios working together comprise a system. A system may consist of just two radios using one frequency, or thousands of radios operating on a hundred two-frequency channels. The different frequencies in a system are usually referred to as "Frequency-1," "Frequency-2," etc., or "Channel-1," "Channel-2," etc. In POLICE CALL, we use "F-1," "F-2," "F-3," etc. for both ways. Some radios systems use colors, instead of numbers: "blue channel," "red channel," etc. (don't ask us why).

In a simplex system, the user of the radio pushes the microphone button to talk, and releases it to listen. The user cannot talk and receive at the same time. A simplex system may use one frequency or two frequencies. In a two-frequency system, base stations talk-out on one frequency and the mobiles talk-in on the second. A semi-duplex system also uses two frequencies, but one or more of the radios (usually the base station) can receive and transmit at the same time. In a full-duplex system, all the radios may send and receive at the same time. Full-duplex is used in mobile telephone systems.

The line-of-sight rule limits the range of base-to-mobile communications, and even more severely restricts the distance over which one mobile or portable may communicate with another. The mobile relay (MR), commonly called a repeater, overcomes both problems. Installed on a tall building or atop a mountain, it receives signals on one frequency (input) and rebroadcasts them on another frequency (output). In effect, it is a semi-duplex radio, because it is receiving and transmitting at the same time. The dispatcher at the station uses a control station which is configured just like a mobile radio. In those areas where a mobile relay may be placed at the top of a mountain rising 5000 feet or more above the average terrain, radio range can sometimes be extended to over ninety miles.

The repeating function may be added to a local or remote base station, and it is then known as a base repeater. Its primary purpose is to extend the range of mobile-to-mobile communication, and allow the mobiles to hear each other when they talk-back to the dispatcher. The dispatcher can turn the repeat function off, if for some reason they do not want the mobile part of the conversation rebroadcast. Unlike using a mobile relay, the dispatcher using a base repeater may override a mobile transmission. A well designed base repeater system will also include a second receiver on the talk-out frequency. Then, if something should go wrong on the repeater talk-back frequency, all radios can switch over and the system becomes a one-frequency simplex system until the problem is solved (one of the things that can go wrong is known as a stuck carrier; that's when a microphone button jams and the transmitter stays on). This switch-over capability can also be used by mobile and portable units to communicate directly with each other, over short distances, without going through the repeater. Since it bypasses the repeater, is referred to as talk-around.

A complex system may have a combination of several repeater channels and simplex one-frequency channels. Dispatchers may multicast (often mistakenly called "simulacast"), that is, broadcast on several channels at the same time.

So far, in all the systems mentioned, channels are used one at a time. These are known as conventional systems. Later, we will examine a different type of system known as trunking (T).

Using your scanner

When listening to a one-frequency simplex system, the mobiles and portables may come in "scratchy," or not at all. It will depend on their distance from your location, as well as the efficiency of your antenna. A "DELAY" should be included, so that you will not miss any parts of the conversation.

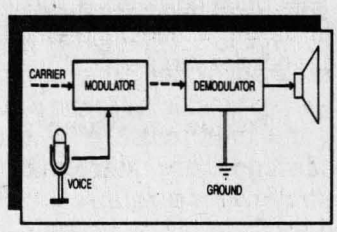
To receive both sides of a message in a two-frequency simplex or semi-duplex system, both frequencies should be entered in the scan program, with no "DELAY." As with a one-frequency system, how well you receive the mobiles and portables will depend on your antenna and distance.

If the station you wish to hear uses a repeater, it is only necessary to tune to the base-repeater or mobile relay frequency. The mobiles and portables will usually be as clear as the station. Program a "DELAY" in order to avoid missing parts of the message.

4. THE TECHNICAL SIDE

NOTE: From this point onward, all frequencies (unless otherwise noted) will be in megaHertz, and the abbreviation "MHz" may be omitted.

By stretching the imagination, it is possible to make a rough comparison between an airplane journey and a radio broadcast. Suppose you want to fly from New York to Chicago. The plane is your carrier. You board the carrier, travel to your destination, and then leave the carrier.



A police dispatcher wants to send a message to a patrol car. The radio transmitter places his voice on (modulates) a radio carrier. In the patrol car, the radio receiver removes the voice from (demodulates) the carrier and outputs it through the loudspeaker.

AM or FM

The radio carrier may be modulated by one of two different techniques: amplitude modulation (AM) or frequency modulation (FM). How each works is beyond the scope of this Guide. Either one may be used on any frequency, but FM is used for all VHF-UHF services except aeronautical and Citizens Band.

FM has two advantages over AM: markedly less interference from static, and a phenomenon known as the capture effect. To explain the latter, first suppose you are trying to listen to two AM stations on the same frequency, equally powerful and the same distance from you. Because of the interference, you would not understand either one. If one of the two were moved farther away, it would still cause interference unless it was moved almost completely out of range. Now let's suppose they are FM stations. With equal signals, there would still be interference. But if one were moved away slowly, it would reach a point not too far away when the closer signal would completely block out, or capture, your receiver. The exact distance would depend to some extent on the receiver design. Comparing the difference in signal strength needed between the nearer signal and the farther one, when it first gets blocked out, is known as the capture ratio. With careful planning, several FM stations can use the same frequency although they are within hearing range of each other. The only advantages of AM are that stations take up less space — more stations can be packed into a given band — and the circuitry is simpler. When all other factors are equal, AM has slightly greater range than FM.

AM was in use on the 30-42MHz Police Band before World War II. In 1939, General Electric demonstrated the superiority of FM for land-mobile communications, and was manufacturing it in limited quantities during the war. However, AM continued to be the dominant mode as the military expanded the spectrum upwards. FM was more complicated, the equipment was bulkier, and channel width was greater (fewer frequencies per MHz). In this country, FM became the standard in 1948, but many foreign nations continued to intermix AM and FM. VHF amateur radio used AM exclusively until the end of the 1950's.

At the end of World War II, aviation radio started to move up to VHF, using AM. FM was not even considered because it was in its infancy and had the shortcomings mentioned above (size, circuitry and band- width). By the time FM was perfected, any attempt to convert to FM would have been a world-wide logistical and financial nightmare.

Frequency Mixing

Before proceeding, it is necessary to explain a phenomenon that will be referred to several times: frequency mixing. On a piano, hit the A-above-middle-C, which has a tone of 440 cycles per second (cps). Now strike the A that is two octaves higher, 1760 cps. You hear two tones, one after the other. What happens when you strike both keys at the same time? Listen carefully and there will be four different tones! You will hear 440cps and 1760cps, as expected. You will also hear the sum and the difference of the two: 2200 cps (1760 +440 = 2200) and 1320cps (1760 -440 = 1320). You mixed two audio frequencies and got four. The same thing can be done with radio frequencies. More on this later.

The antenna of a radio receiver captures hundreds, perhaps thousands, of radio signals. Some may be as weak as 1/1,000,000 of a volt (1 microvolt) or less! The basic task of any radio receiver is threefold:

- Separate the wanted signal from all others.
- Amplify the signal.
- Remove what you want to hear (intelligence) from the carrier.

This process occurs in stages that follow one after another.

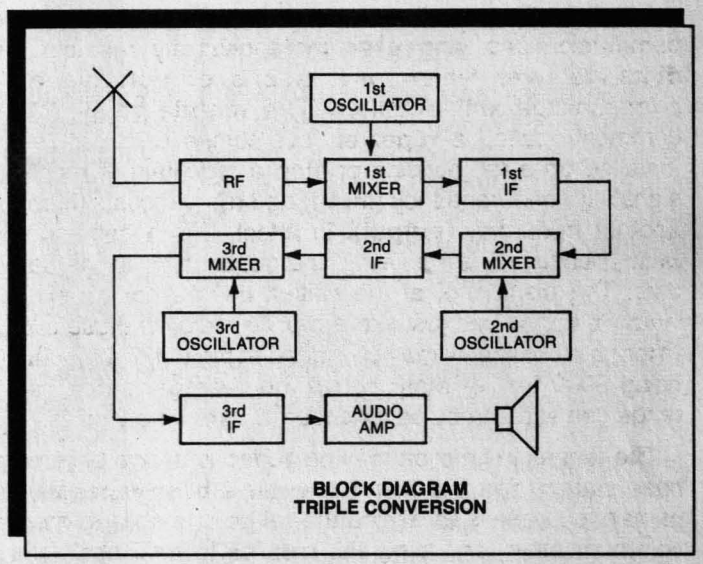
BLOCK DIAGRAM
DUAL CONVERSION



BLOCK DIAGRAM
TRIPLE CONVERSION

A drawing showing all the components as they are connected in a scanner (schematic diagram) is complicated and useful mostly to technicians. However, you can follow the path of the radio signal with a block diagram that shows the major stages.

The radio signals from the antenna first enter the radio frequency (RF) stage, also known as the front end of the receiver. Many of the unwanted frequencies are filtered out and there may be some amplification.

The next stage is where mixing enters the process. To receive the wanted frequency, a radio receiver must filter out (reject) all the other frequencies that managed to pass through the RF stage. One way to do this would be to have every following stage retune to the desired frequency. This would be a complicated and expensive procedure. Early on, it was realized that the process of rejection and amplification had to be simplified. What if all the stages could be factory set to operate at just one frequency, regardless of whatever frequency was selected for listening? In 1918, Edwin H. Armstrong invented a way to do this, and the superheterodyne system was born. It is now used in all radio and TV sets.

FREQUENCY MIXING

Within every radio receiver, there is a very weak radio transmitter, known as a local oscillator. When a scanner (or any radio) is tuned, it is really the local oscillator that is being tuned, but to a frequency different from that shown on the dial. Suppose you want to receive a frequency of 100.0. When the dial is tuned to 100.0, the local oscillator is tuned to 89.3. This happens to be exactly 10.7 below the wanted frequency (Some scanners use 10.8, so the local oscillator will be a little different). The 89.3 signal is injected into the path of all the incoming frequencies at the mixer stage. One of these incoming frequencies is 100.0, the desired frequency. When 89.3 is mixed with 100.0, four frequencies are produced: 100.0, 89.3, 189.3 (100.0 +89.3) and 10.7 (100.0 -89.3). The factory has pretuned all the following stages to amplify only 10.7 and reject all the others. These stages are called the intermediate frequency (IF) stages because they are between the RF stage and the audio amplifying stages. To receive 500.0, the local oscillator would tune to 489.3, and again, the mixer would produce an IF of 10.7 (500.0 -489.3 = 10.7).

In AM broadcast receivers, the standard IF is 455 KHz. For the FM broadcast band, 10.7MHz is the standard. Scanners take the procedure one step further and use dual conversion. The signal is first converted to 10.7 or 10.8 (the 1st IF), and then to 455 KHz (2nd IF). Some scanners may use different IF frequencies, but the principle is the same. Consult your owner's manual.

The conversion process itself can create a problem known as Image (See: 6. STRANGE SOUNDS). To reduce or eliminate the problem, some newer scanners use triple conversion, with the additional IF stage placed before the 10.7 IF stage.

After several IF stages, during which the signal is amplified many thousands of times, the signal reaches the detector stage. Here, the voice is separated from the radio carrier. Then the audio frequencies (AF) are amplified and go to the speaker.

The synthesizer works with the first local oscillator to generate all the different frequencies needed in the first mixer stage. The logic, or computer section, controls the synthesizer, scanning and all other features.

Decibels

The decibel (dB) is a shorthand way of measuring relative changes in power: that is, it does not stand alone but compares two sets of values. Each dB of gain (increase) is 26% more than the last number, and each dB of loss (decrease) is 11% less than the last number. A 2dB gain is an increase of 60%, 3dB is a gain of 100% and 10dB is a gain of 1000%. A -3DB is a loss of 50%, and a -10dB is a loss of 90%.

Suppose we have four different light bulbs of 20, 40, 80 and 200 watts:

- The 20-watt bulb, our starting point, is 0dB.
- The 40-watt bulb is 3dB more powerful than the 20-watt bulb.
- The 80-watt bulb is 3dB more powerful than the 40-watt, and, 6dB more than the 20-watt.
- The 200-watt is 10dB more than the 20-watt.
- If we start with the 200-watt as 0dB, then the 20-watt is -10dB.

The following table converts dB gains (+) and losses (-) to multiplying factors:

dBs	Gain (+)	Loss (-)
0	0 x	0 x
1	1.26 x	.79 x
2	1.60 x	.63 x
3	2.00 x	.50 x
4	2.50 x	.40 x
5	3.20 x	.32 x
6	4.00 x	.25 x
10	10.00 x	10 x
20	100.00 x	.01 x

■ An amplifier has a gain (+) of 5dB. The input is 10 watts. What is the output?

10 watts x 3.20 = 32 watts.

■ A cable has a loss (-) of 4dB. The input to the cable is 10 watts. How much power comes out of the cable?

10 watts X .40 = 4 watts.

Scanner Specifications

The scanner owner's manual lists the performance specifications ("specs") of the unit. Most specs need no explanation. A few get technical.

Conversion method. As was pointed out in the section on frequency mixing, the dual conversion system can cause problems. Triple conversion can reduce or eliminate many types of interference.

Sensitivity. This is a measure of the ability of a scanner to receive weak signals. Simply put, what is the least amount of signal that can be heard, "loud and clear?"

To be able to make comparisons, there has to be a scientific definition of what is "loud and clear?" When you turn off the squelch on a receiver, the rushing noise you hear is known as shot noise. Some people might just call it "static." As a radio signal gets stronger, the shot noise gets weaker, until it seems to disappear entirely with a very strong signal. "Loud and clear" is defined as the difference between the loudness of the signal that is heard, and the shot noise in the background.

There are two standard methods of measuring the difference: the 20dB signal-to-noise (20dB S/N) method and the 12dB SINAD method. In the 20dB S/N, technicians measure how much signal it takes so that the radio will reproduce sound that is 20dB louder than the noise (see the dB chart above). The SINAD technique is similar, but uses a very complicated formula to determine the difference. The two do produce slightly different results.

The strength of the signal is measured in microvolts (uV). A microvolt is 1/1,000,000 of a volt. The smaller the number of microvolts or fractions of a microvolt, the weaker the signal.

The complete formula for sensitivity is: What is the weakest signal, in uV, that the radio can receive and reproduce with either 20 dB S/N or 12dB SINAD. The smaller the number, the better the receiver is performing: .25uV is better than .35uV. The catch is that beyond certain limits, increasing sensitivity will have negative effects on other functions of the receiver. Why trade a headache for an upset stomach?

Sensitivity is measured under laboratory conditions. These seldom occur in the field. The air is cluttered with all types of radio noise that can interfere with receiving a wanted signal. Many of these are discussed in a later section. To be heard, a radio signal must be stronger than the interference, which increases as the frequency gets lower. It doesn't help a bit to have a receiver with .5uV sensitivity if the noise level is 10uV, which would not be unusual on low-band in an area with many factories.

In a vehicle on the highway, there is noise from wires, motors, and even the wind rushing by the antenna. They all interfere with reception. Here are some estimates of how strong a radio signal must be to be heard while traveling 55 mph:

- UHF 1uV
- VHF-high 2uV
- VHF-low 4uV

Traveling through an industrial area, these numbers could double.

Selectivity. The "window" of a receiver will admit some signal outside of the tuned frequency. A strong signal on either side of the wanted one could cause interference. The selectivity spec compares an equally strong signal some given distance away from the tuned signal, and tells how much the receiver reduces it below the wanted one. Example: "-10dB at 7.5KHz" would mean that an identically powerful transmission 7.5KHz away from the tuned one would be 10dB lower in strength, even though it went through the filtering and amplification stages.

*Audio Output. An indication of how loud your scanner can be, at maximum. It will depend on the circuitry and the speaker. Too much audio from a small speaker can cause distortion, or even break the speaker, but the volume control is usually set to stop before that can happen. Audio power is measured in watts. For a desktop scanner, the maximum is usually one watt, with higher quality units having more. Handheld scanners offer additional problems. The speaker must be smaller, and the greater the maximum power output, the greater the drain on the batteries. The audio in these units is usually stated in milliwatts (thousandths of a watt), with 200 milliwatts (one-fifth of a watt) being about the minimum that will provide acceptable audio in a moderate noise environment.

5. ANTENNA SYSTEMS

If your only interest is in hearing local repeaters, you can skip this section. The little antenna that comes with a scanner is all you need.

On the other hand, if you want to hear distant signals; if you want to listen to police, fire and emergency crews working on the scene; then, you will need a good antenna installation. How and where you install the antenna will be the major factor in getting good reception.

There are four items to consider for a rooftop antenna installation:

- Antenna
- Location
- Antenna support
- Connecting cable

What follows is rather generalized, and should be considered only as guidelines. Every situation is different, and you should consult with your scanner dealer to determine what will work best for you. Your dealer probably carries all the items you will need.

Choosing An Antenna

There are four basic types of antennas:

The "wick." Dip the bottom of a piece of string in some oil, and the string will soak up a little of it. Any piece of wire or metal will absorb some radio waves. The collapsible antenna that comes packed with most scanners is a "wick." Better than nothing.

Wideband. Designed to be somewhat efficient at all frequencies. Its drawback is that it also brings in unwanted frequencies and noise that can interfere with the desired frequencies. The discone is an example of a wideband antenna. It does not have the capability of improving reception (0 gain) on the bands most listened to. Discone antennas may not work as well on low-band unless a special low-band vertical element is included.

Multiband. Several elements make up this type of antenna, which is designed to be most efficient for the bands found in scanners; at the same time receiving poorly on the unwanted bands. Multiband antennas are available in both base and mobile configurations. A beam antenna will greatly improve reception when the target signal is coming from one particular direction. The beam can be pointed in different directions by a remote control unit.

Monoband. Efficient antennas are designed to match wavelength. Thus, for the best reception, you should install a separate antenna for each band, but this is inconvenient and may not be practical for you. You can do it, using a multiple-antenna switch to change from antenna to antenna. If you try to use an antenna "splitter," you may find that the signal losses outweigh the gains. Commercial multicouplers, used in some commercial 2-way systems, are available, but very expensive.

Any antenna will receive a strong signal. If there is one band that you will be listening to most of the time, you may want to use a monoband antenna for maximum efficiency. Since monoband antennas are designed according to wavelength, the antennas get shorter as the frequency goes higher. Select an antenna long enough for the band you will listen to most. For example, if you have no interest in VHF-low, an antenna designed for VHF-high will work fairly well on UHF and 800MHz. The use of a single-band antenna offers additional advantages. You can purchase a high gain model. Carefully designed, these improve reception over that of a plain monoband antenna.

A preamplifier can boost weak signals that might not otherwise be received, and can also overcome losses in very long cable runs. However, they should not be used in metropolitan areas where they will also boost strong signals that can saturate and overload the receiver.

(Our thanks to David Austin of Austin Antenna for some of the above material).

Location

The basic principles for a good antenna installation are:

- Get it up high (with limitations).
- Keep it as far away as possible from sources of interference.

Obviously, the first choice is on top of a building, but this isn't always practical. A location in the attic will suffice if not obstructed. The inside of a building may be satisfactory if its primary construction is wood, stucco or brick. If you live in a modern high-rise and can't get access to the roof, at least try to get the antenna as close to a window as possible. With a little ingenuity, you might be able to mount an antenna just outside of a window.

Where is the best location on a roof? Mounting considerations may narrow the choices. The antenna should be installed as far away as possible from power lines and telephone wires, electrical machinery and street traffic. Nearby tall structures, trees and metal poles may interfere with reception. If all of those restrictions still leave you with choices, select the location that will require the shortest length of connecting cable.

The range of reception for your scanner is primarily based on how high above the ground you locate your antenna. There is a theoretical formula for increasing range. It assumes that the surrounding terrain is flat. The numbers don't work if you are in an area of steep hills and valleys. Measuring from the ground to the bottom of the antenna:

- Doubling the height of the antenna above ground will increase range by 33%.
- Tripling the height of the antenna above ground will increase range by 65%.
- Quadrupling the height of the antenna above ground will increase range by 100%.

Let's take, as an example, a building that is 15' high. Putting an antenna right on the roof may allow you to hear UHF mobile units as far as six miles away. If the antenna is placed on a 15' mast so that it is 30' above the ground, the range will increase to eight miles. Change the mast to one that is 45' tall: the antenna is now 60' above the ground and range would be 12 miles. That's double the original distance. To double the range again to 24 miles, a 225' tower would be required.

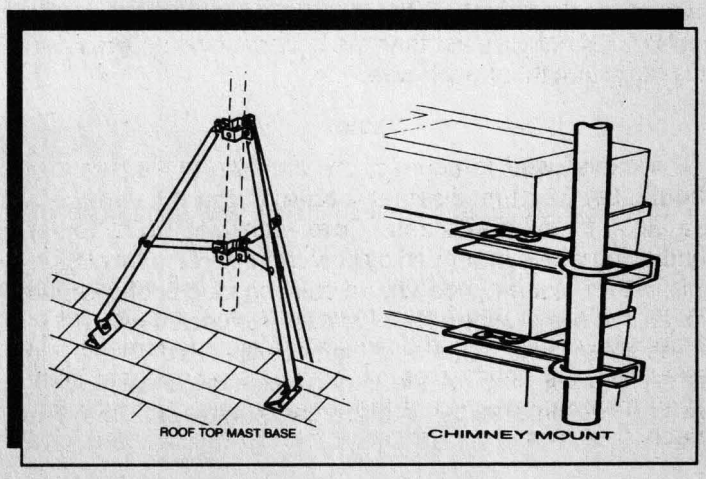
Notice that, a couple of paragraphs back, we said "theoretical formula." In reality, it doesn't quite work that way. That's because some of the signal will be lost (dissipated) in the cable, and the longer the cable, the greater the loss. There are cross-over points at which there is more loss in adding cable than gain in raising the antenna (more on cable losses later).

Antenna support

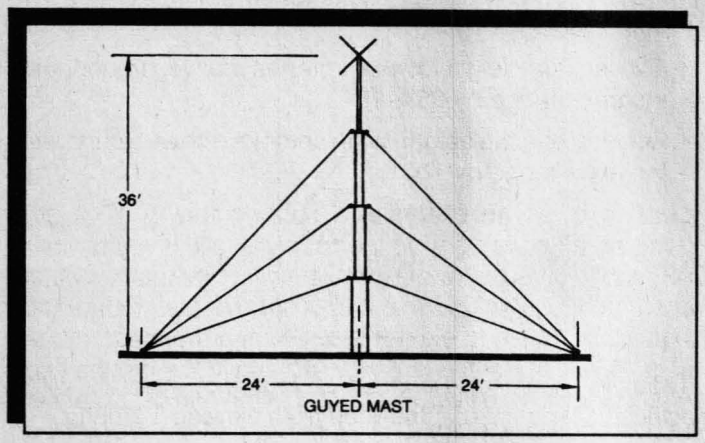
You have to mount the antenna on something. The simplest support is an existing TV-antenna mast. Just clamp the scanner antenna to the top of the pole. For details on connecting the antenna to the scanner, see the information below on cables and antenna installation.

The alternative is a separate pole. You can use the same type of support used for TV antennas. For lengths up to 20', there are masts that come in 5' and 10' interlocking sections. They are relatively easy to work with.

Another type of antenna support is the "zip pole." It's a telescoping mast consisting of sections that, when "zipped up," extends up to 36'.



The bottom of the pole has to be firmly held in place. It can be secured to a sturdy vent pipe using special clamps. There are mounting brackets specifically designed to secure the mast to a chimney. There are also various types of mast holders that attach to the roof or the eaves. One model, the "tripod mount" or "quad pod," has adjustable legs so that it can be used on flat or pitched roofs.



Guy wires are used to keep the mast upright and in place, regardless of the weather. They are attached in sets of three wires: the number of sets depending on the length of the pole. For 10' and 20' masts, the guy wires should be attached at the top of the pole, just below the point where the antenna is clamped to the mast. If the length of the mast is 36'-40', one set of wires should be installed at the top of each section. The three wires in each set are then spread out an equal distance apart, like a pyramid. They should be tied down — anchored — securely at a distance away from the mast equal to about 2/3's of the mast's height. Your particular conditions may dictate that you do the best you can to come close to these specifications.

Guy wire is sold in 100' rolls, and has to be cut to the proper lengths. The following are the lengths needed for various mast sizes (a bit extra has been allowed for anchoring the wire):

- 10' mast - three (3) wires, each 15' long
- 20' mast - three (3) wires, each 30' long
- 40' mast - three (3) wires, each 20' long; three (3) wires, each 30' long; and three (3) wires, each 45' long.

On a peaked roof, if the guy wires are going to be anchored at points lower than the bottom of the pole, allow a little more length for each wire.

Cable

The cable used to connect the antenna to the scanner should be 52-ohm coaxial cable ("coax"), which is available in several sizes. Coax consists of a center conducting wire surrounded by polyurethane or foam plastic. This, in turn, is surrounded by an outer conductor of fine wire woven into a web, or braid. All of this is protected with a thin plastic outer jacket. Use only high-quality cable. The sun's ultraviolet rays can rot the outer jacket of cheap cable, allowing moisture to get into the cable and rust the outer wire.

We mentioned that antenna height was an important factor, but cable length may place limits on how high you should go. As the signals travel down the coax from the antenna, some of the signal is lost. How much is lost depends on the frequency band, and the length and type of cable. The higher the frequency, the greater the signal loss. There is also a considerable difference in signal losses between various types of cable.

The following table shows how much of the signal is lost in 50' and 100' lengths of three types of coaxial cable (losses may vary slightly from manufacturer to manufacturer):

Coaxial cable losses

Cable Type:	RG58C/U		RG8A/U		9913
Length of cable:	50'	100'	50'	100'	50'	100'

160MHz	-52%	-76%	-28%	-46%	-18%	-34%
460MHz	-74%	-93%	-45%	-69%	-31%	-46%

(*May only be available from commercial 2-way radio shops)

Bob Grove, editor of Monitoring Times, and Scot Broderick, columnist for U.S. Scanner News, suggest an economical alternative to the relatively expensive RG-8 cables. RG6/U is a 72-ohm coax designed for TV.

While it is not a perfect match for scanners and scanner antennas, its low-loss characteristics offset the mismatch to a great extent. It is double-shielded, a benefit if the cable must pass by sources of electrical interference.

When you measure for the amount of cable you will need, add a couple of extra feet for a "drip loop" and to give yourself flexibility in moving your scanner.

Never splice pieces of cable together, even using connectors, as they add additional losses. Use one solid length. Should you use foam-insulated cable, you must be extra careful in handling it. Sharp bending, even for a moment can crack the foam layer.

You will need connectors at each end of the cable. Most antennas accept the standard male PL-259 connector. The connectors installed on scanners vary. You can select the cable connector specifically matched to your unit, or use the PL-259 and an adapter to fit your receiver. Adapters do add a little more signal loss to the antenna system.

Coax cable can be purchased with PL-259 connectors already attached. If you are handy with a soldering iron, you may want to buy the cable separately and add the connectors yourself. When soldering any type of radio connection, always use rosin-core solder and make sure that you have a good solder joint. Attaching the connectors yourself allows you to use only as much cable as you actually need, and makes installation easier, since you can add the scanner-end connector after the cable has been installed.

Always use good quality, new connectors and make sure they fit tightly. Solder the cable outer braid to the connector.

Never use "connecting" or "conducting" grease," since a tight fit will squeeze it out and it could cause a short circuit.

Installing an antenna

*Please be careful! We recently received the tragic news that one of our readers, his wife and his son, were all electrocuted while attempting to install an antenna at their home.

If you don't think you can install an antenna yourself, your dealer can recommend a professional installer to do it for you. You may want to visit a commercial 2-way radio shop. These are listed in the telephone book Yellow Pages under "Radio Communications Equipment & Service."

Plan ahead! You should assemble everything you're going to need at least one day before the actual installation:

- Antenna
- Mast
- Mast support or bracket
- Coax cable
- Guy wire
- Heavy ground wire
- Hardware (clamps, guy wire anchors, etc.)
- Soldering equipment
- Tools (screwdriver, pliers, wire cutter, pocket knife)
- Small wire brush
- Silicone grease
- Electricians tape

The guy wires should be cut to the lengths needed, stretched out and temporarily tied down tight to get the kinks and bends out. If the antenna needs to be assembled, do it now or practice so that you won't get any unpleasant surprises.

SAFETY FIRST!

Have someone help you, especially if the mast is more than 20' high.

If you are going to work alone, be sure that someone is within calling distance and can hear you.

Unplug your scanner from the wall socket or power source before you begin.

Make sure that, if the mast falls over, it will not fall on power lines or anything else that can hurt you or cause damage.

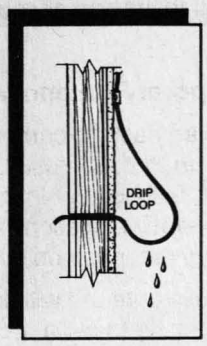
Installation Suggestions

Procedure checklist:

1. Install support bracket.
2. Assemble the antenna.
3. Install antenna on mast.
4. Attach coax cable to antenna
5. Attach guy wires to mast.
6. Tape cable to mast.
7. Install antenna & mast in bracket.
8. Anchor guy wires.
9. Run cable to scanner.

Use the wire brush to clean all the connector parts that make contact with each other.

When you have attached the cable to the antenna, coat the connection liberally with silicon grease and then wrap the connection with electrician's tape. This will protect it from weather corrosion.



Tape the cable to the mast at four foot intervals with electricians tape to keep the wind from blowing it around.

As you set the guy wires in place, leave a little slack. Don't anchor them permanently until you are sure that the mast is perfectly upright. You will probably have to make little adjustments to do this. Then you can secure the guy wires tightly.

After the entire antenna/mast structure is in place and the guy wires secure, attach the ground wire to some point at the bottom of the pole. Attach the other end to a scraped-clean place on a cold-water pipe, using a little clamp. This may help protect your equipment from a lightning strike.

At the point where the coax is to enter the building, let a little of the cable hang down lower than the entry point to act as a "drip loop" for moisture.

Mobile Installation

You can install a permanent antenna on your vehicle, or a removable one that uses a magnet in the base to keep it in place. Mobile antennas usually come furnished with cable and connectors.

Do not try to install a scanner in a vehicle unless you are thoroughly familiar with its mechanical and electrical systems. Your scanner dealer may have a professional installer who can do the job for you. If he doesn't, you should be able to locate a commercial two-way radio company in your area. An alternate choice would be a company that installs stereo systems.

The antenna should be installed as far from the engine as possible to minimize ignition system noise. Route the cables to avoid contact with moving parts such as hinges, drive shafts, sliding seat mounts, etc. Keep them away from any part of the exhaust system to prevent heat damage. Don't place the cable where it will be pinched between two hard objects.

In selecting a location for the scanner, choose one that gives easy access to the controls and does not block the speaker. There may be places in the vehicle where you can attach the radio using Velcro instead of permanent screws:

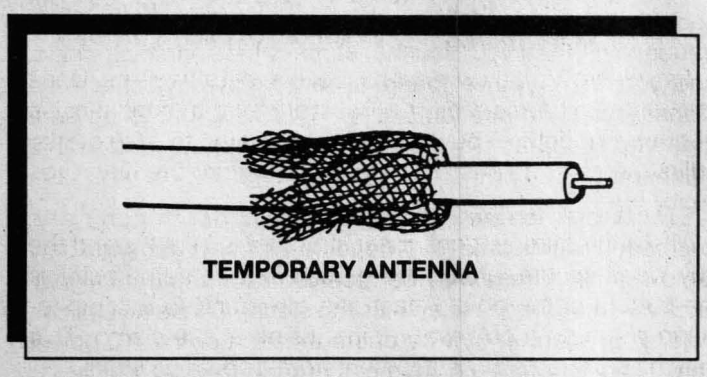
perhaps on a center armrest or driveshaft tunnel. This will also allow you to remove the scanner for security.

The power cable may be wired directly to the battery circuit at the fuse block, but if you forget to turn the scanner off, it will run the battery down. It is best to wire it to the "accessory" side of the ignition switch, so that the scanner turns on-off with the engine. For temporary mobile use, an adaptor can be attached to the power cable that will plug into the cigarette lighter.

Temporary Antennas

You may want to use an easy-to-carry temporary antenna if you travel and stay in hotels, motels or on a boat. A temporary antenna will also come in handy if something happens to your permanent installation. Any kind of external antenna will also improve reception on a hand-held scanner.

A magnetic-base mobile antenna will do the job. If you are staying at a hotel or motel, try to get a room at the end of the hall, one with a little balcony and as high up as possible.



TEMPORARY ANTENNA

In a pinch, you can make a temporary antenna from a length of coax that has a connector on it. Carefully cut away the outer jacket, starting at the bare end of the cable, for a length as given below. From the following, select the lowest band you want to hear (or the only band) for the amount of jacket to cut off.

- Low-band - 72"
- High-band - 18"
- UHF - 6"
- 800 - 3"

Using a pin or other sharp pointed object, pick the exposed braid wires apart until you can fold them all back over the part of the cable that still has its jacket. Pull these wires down as much as possible, so that they form a kind of skirt. You now have a crude, but usable antenna that can be hung out of a window or taped up to a window or wall.

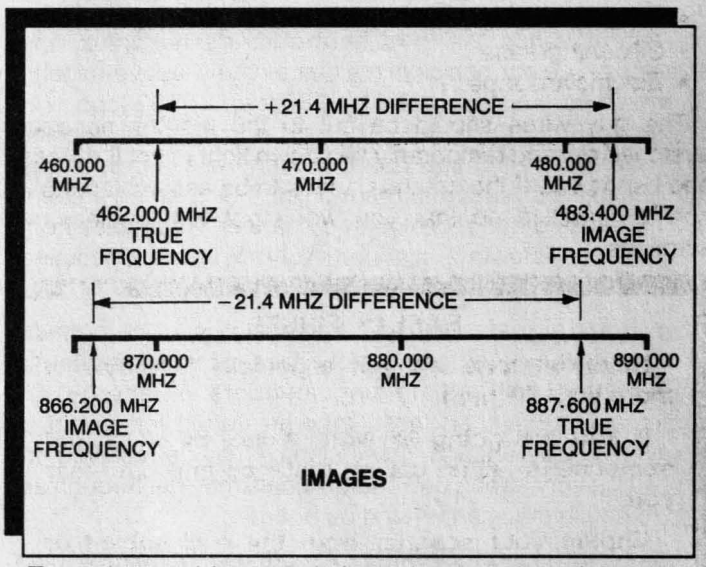
Peter Szerlag (Arlington, MA) offered another temporary "fix" to increase the range of a portable scanner. All it requires is a length of any type of thin wire, preferably around ten feet long. Strip away a couple of feet of the insulation and wrap it around the scanner antenna. Tape the rest of the wire to the wall, running it straight up to the ceiling. We haven't tried it, but Peter says you can increase low-band range by 20 miles. Rick Cunningham (Astoria, NY) suggested using 25 feet of wire, and hanging it out of a window.

6. STRANGE SOUNDS

Your scanner may find signals where they shouldn't be. It is also going to produce some unwanted noises from time to time. In the "search" mode, it may seemingly stop for no reason at all.

Images cause many scanner users — if they don't understand them — to think they've discovered new frequencies. For example, in searching the UHF band, your scanner stops on 474.400 and you hear your local Police. Until now, they've always been heard on 453.000. A new frequency? You should immediately be suspicious, because 474.400 is not a valid frequency (see the Consolidated Frequency List).

What is happening? Your scanner is producing an image. It may be compared to looking into the rearview mirror of a car. The other cars you see aren't really in front of you, they're in back. Similarly, an image is a reflection of a different frequency. It is most common in scanners that use dual conversion. Triple conversion circuits reduce or eliminate them entirely. The false frequencies will always be the same spacing away from the true frequency: 21.4 MHz, 21.6 MHz or 21.7 MHz (the image spread), depending on your scanner. The image may be higher or lower than the true frequency.



IMAGES

To understand images, let's go back to the mixer stage before the 1st IF. When your display shows that your scanner is receiving 474.400, the local oscillator is actually tuned to 463.700 (if your IF is 10.7). Mixing the two signals produces 10.7 (474.400 minus 463.700 = 10.7). However, if your local police signal, 453.000, is strong enough to get through the filtering in the RF stage, it will also mix with the local oscillator signal to produce the same IF (463.700 minus 453.000 = 10.7). Notice that the difference between the frequency in the display and the frequency being heard is 21.4, the image spread, which is exactly two times the 1st IF (10.7 X 2 = 21.4).

Consult your owner's manual. If your scanner IF is 10.7, the image will be 21.4 higher or lower, a 10.8 IF will produce an image 21.6 higher or lower, and a 10.85 IF will yield an image 21.7 higher or lower. Always check the Consolidated Frequency List to see if you are receiving a valid frequency. If not, subtract your image spread and see if it is the same as the frequency you usually hear. If you don't find the true frequency, add the image spread.

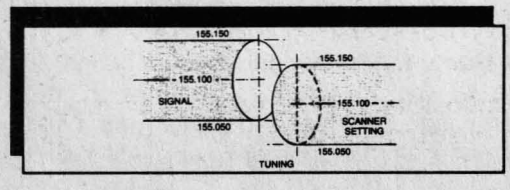
Birdies are signals created inside the receiver. Every scanner has them. To find the birdies in your receiver, begin by disconnecting the antenna and moving it away from the receiver. Make sure that no other nearby radio or TV sets are turned on. Use the "search" function and scan each frequency range from its lowest frequency to the highest. Occasionally, the searching will stop as if it had found a signal, often without any sound. That's a birdie. Make a list of all the birdies in your unit for future reference.

Intermodulation ("intermod") sounds as if your scanner is receiving two different stations at the same time. They may seem to switch on and off, unpredictably. Intermod is the mixing of two different radio signals and may occur in many ways. It can be created internally in your scanner, or produced at some other location and enter your receiver, through the antenna, as one signal. The latter is very common in metropolitan areas, especially when a large number of radio transmitters are located at one site.

Harmonics. When a device generates an audio or radio frequency, it also creates exact multiples of that frequency: double, triple, etc. The second harmonic is twice the original frequency, the third harmonic is three times, and so it goes. The harmonics of the piano note A-above-middle-C, which is 440cps, are (2) 880cps, (3)1320cps, (4) 1760cps, (5) 2200cps, etc. The odd numbered harmonics (3,5) are much stronger than the even ones. Transmitters are designed to suppress harmonics, but a small amount can be radiated and received by a scanner. Harmonics from the local oscillator in a scanner may mix with an incoming signal and produce a false reading on the display.

Spurious signals. No radio transmitter is 100% perfect, and no receiver is completely free of imperfections. Transmitters will radiate tiny amounts of energy on frequencies other than those they are tuned for, and if a receiver is close enough, those signals may be received. In turn, some very strong unwanted signals may get through all the filtering in the scanner and be heard.

False signals on 800MHz. As previously pointed out, many scanners tune the 800MHz band by using a special local oscillator tuned to 400MHz. It mixes and converts all 800MHz signals to the 400MHz band (e.g., 855.4875 is converted to 455.4875). The scanner circuitry then processes the signal as if it were in the 406-540MHz range. Sometimes, a real signal in the 400MHz band will leak through. Example: You are searching the 800MHz band, and at 896.0125 you hear the local police, which you usually hear on 496.0125. Notice that the difference is exactly 400MHz.



Off-frequency reception. You're searching the UHF band, looking for new frequencies, when your scanner stops at 155.005, and you hear your local police department, normally heard on 155.010. Have they suddenly changed frequencies, or added a new one?

Look at the shape of a modulated radio signal. Try to think of it as being like a flashlight beam. The light is not just a single dot, but a wide beam. The same holds true for a radio signal. A signal on 155.010 (the center frequency) spreads out as much as .005 MHz on each side, from 155.005-155.015. Everything else except 155.010 are sidebands. The receiver also has some width, like a window: it can receive frequencies just a little bit on each side of the tuned frequency. As soon as any part of the signal "beam" enters the receiver "window," the searching will stop, even though the center of the frequency being received (like the middle of the light beam) is not the exact frequency being tuned (middle of the window).

Some scanners have an automatic frequency control, such as Zeromatic, that zero's the receiver in on the center frequency. When your scanner stops in the searching mode, and you think you've found a new frequency, check the Consolidated Frequency List in POLICE CALL to be sure that you're tuned to the center frequency, and not a sideband.

Electrical noise. Electrical devices, machinery, fluorescent lights and overhead wires may generate tiny radio signals. These may be received as a separate signal, or cause interference to an existing signal. These noises can enter your scanner by way of the antenna or the AC power cord. The interference is most pronounced at the lower frequencies (VHF-low). It diminishes with increasing frequency and is virtually non-existent at 800MHz. Vehicle ignition systems and power lines are the primary culprits, but even an electric blanket can cause problems. The local oscillators in nearby radio and TV sets may generate signals strong enough to reach your receiver. Some electrical noise is heard as a crackling or buzzing sound. It may also be in the form of "white noise": you can't hear it, but it is there. White noise can be strong enough to block out a wanted signal.

Front end overload or saturation. In areas with a heavy concentration of radio systems, so much electromagnetic energy comes into the front end of the receiver that it breaks down — overloads. When this happens, the RF stage cannot even properly process strong signals, and reception becomes very poor. Some scanners are equipped with an attenuator switch that helps in this type of situation. When turned on, the attenuator reduces or eliminates amplification in the RF stage, where much of the "garbage" is amplified along with the wanted signal. The desired station still gets through to the IF stages, but the unwanted interference is lost. Note that this only works when receiving strong signals. Attenuation eliminates the ability of the scanner to receive weak signals. The attenuator should be turned off when not absolutely needed. Experiment with the use of the attenuator to determine when to use it.

Adjacent channel interference. This is very similar to front end overload. When tuned to a weak signal, a very strong one on either side could force enough power through the circuits to cause interference.

Reader Mickey Reback offers a tip for tuning out interference from adjacent channels or spurious signals, so long as the spur is not exactly on the frequency. His suggestion won't work with all scanners, but it's worth a try. The idea is to tune slightly off-frequency, on the side away from the interfering signal. Suppose one of your favorite frequencies is 155.370, but you find that a very strong signal on 155.385 interferes with reception. Try programming 155.3675 or 155.365. Both are within the bandwidth of the desired frequency, but may be far enough away from the unwanted signal to eliminate the problem.

7. FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Radio systems operated by agencies of the United States Government (Army, FBI, etc.) receive their authorization from the Interdepartmental Radio Advisory Committee (IRAC). All other radio systems, and all the frequencies they use, are licensed by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC).

The data in Part I and Part II are obtained directly from copies of the Radio Station licenses at the time they are issued by the FCC. The information is current to within three weeks of the time that POLICE CALL goes to the printer.

How A License is Obtained

Every non-Federal two-way radio in the land-mobile radio services must be licensed by the FCC. A request for frequencies in the Public Safety Radio Services must first be submitted to a coordinating organization; the local chapter of Association of Public Safety Communications Officials (APCO), or other designated coordinator. The coordinator may help find a suitable frequency if requested. It is the task of the coordinating group to assure that a new frequency user will not cause interference to an existing user. Tests may be required, or a frequency may be approved providing that a directional antenna is used or the transmitter power is limited. The committee recommendation, together with a license application, is then submitted to the FCC.

The FCC reviews the application to be sure that its rules are met. If there is to be a new antenna support structure near an airport, they will coordinate with the Federal Aviation Agency (FAA) to make sure that there is no hazard to aircraft.

Licenses are valid for five years and must be renewed at the end of that period if no changes are made to the system. After a license has expired, the FCC allows a grace period of 30 days for the license to be reinstated and renewed. Thereafter, a new license application must be submitted. Once the grace period has passed, another applicant may claim the frequencies, and the old user may have to find new ones.

If any changes are made to a radio system — adding or deleting frequencies or equipment — the license must be modified and a new five-year license issued.

Under extenuating circumstances, the FCC can issue a Special Temporary Authority (STA) to allow a station to operate for a short period of time. If operation is to continue, a regular license must be obtained.

What is licensed by the FCC (and therefore listed in POLICE CALL), and what is actually in use, do not always coincide:

- Several thousand stations have failed to renew their licenses and have been deleted from our data base.
- Use of unlicensed or unauthorized frequencies.
- Unlicensed stations.
- Licensed frequencies not yet in use.
- Frequencies abandoned without notification to the FCC.
- Change of name without notification to the FCC.
- Licenses issued after POLICE CALL goes to press.
- Operations when a license is not required.

Readers who are aware of operating stations (Public Safety only), not listed in POLICE CALL, are encouraged to write and let us know. The mistake may be ours.

There are situations in which an FCC license is not required. This is best explained by giving examples:

- Orange County (CA) operates a Trunked Radio system that is shared by fifteen city fire departments within the County. The cities do not require licenses. The local coordinator is responsible for maintaining system records.
- California has designated 156.075 as a tactical emergency mutual aid frequency for all public safety agencies. The State is licensed for 8000 mobiles. None of the agencies require a license, as they operate under the State license.
- Smith County dispatches for all the volunteer fire departments in the county. None of the departments have a base station. Only the County needs a license, as long as they include the total number of radios that will be used.
- Townville and Cityville are adjacent twin cities, each with ten radio equipped police cars. Each has its own dispatching frequency and base station. All mobiles in both cities can operate on both frequencies. As long as each city licenses for twenty mobiles, the second frequency does not have to be included on the licenses.

Radio Services

Every frequency under the jurisdiction of the FCC is assigned to a specific use, or Radio Service (a complete list of allocations for land-mobile use can be found in the back of POLICE CALL). The different service(s) are grouped into related categories called Radio Services.

Public Safety Radio Services. This is the group featured in POLICE CALL. The individual service(s) within this category are:

- Forestry Conservation Radio Service (C) includes Fish & Game authorities and parks.
- Fire Radio Service (F) is open to paid, volunteer, and private fire suppression organizations.

- Local Government Radio Service (L) is a mixed bag. It may be used for any governmental function, from police to animal control. These frequencies may even be intermixed with other Public Safety Radio Services: a police department, for example may use both Local Government and Police frequencies in the same system. Some governmental activities, such as street maintenance or municipal transportation, may be eligible to use Local Government or another Radio Service.
- *Emergency Medical Radio Service (M) is new, and limited to agencies that provide basic and advanced life support. It includes frequencies taken from the Special Emergency Radio Service. Many ambulances, clinics and hospitals also use frequencies in the Business Radio Service. These may be found in our companion directory BEYOND POLICE CALL.
- Police Radio Service (P) is limited to authorized law enforcement agencies. Private patrol companies, mall security and private college security are not eligible and must use the Business Radio Service (these may be found in BEYOND POLICE CALL).
- Highway Maintenance Radio Service (R).
- Special Emergency Radio Service (S) is open to hospitals, ambulances, search & rescue teams, ski patrols, Civil Defense organizations, school buses, beach patrols and veterinarians. Mortuaries that use their vehicles as ambulances cannot conduct mortuary business on these channels, and so may choose to use the Business Radio Service (see BEYOND POLICE CALL).

The FCC makes exceptions to allow both intra-services and inter-services sharing. For example, if no Police frequencies are available in an area, the FCC may authorize a police department to operate on an unused Highway Maintenance channel. Previously, an organization such as a police department using both Police (P) and Local Government (L) frequencies had to have two separate licenses. To reduce paperwork, the FCC is now allowing one license to show all the frequencies under a single category. Example: you may find a Police (P) license with frequencies that really belong to another Radio Service. Or vice versa. Police agencies are even being allocated channels originally assigned to railroads.

The FCC is also issuing system licenses. The system license may replace several licenses for an agency that has numerous frequencies and transmitter locations within a defined compact area. A second type of system license, usually Local Government when the frequencies are all in one band, includes all the various agencies of an entity such as a city. The entity may use the individual frequencies as it sees fit. You can expect to see more Police and Fire frequencies being included in a Local Government system license.

Trunked Radio Systems (T) may be shared by many agencies, and are discussed in another section.

8. RADIO SYSTEMS

In both VHF bands, Police, Fire, Forestry, Local Government and Highway Maintenance channels may consist of one or two frequencies. There is no required spacing pattern when two frequencies are used, except that they should be a minimum of 0.6000MHz apart to avoid interference. The two may be used as a simplex/semi-duplex system (one for talk-out and one for talk-in) or a repeater system. Taxicab channels are semi-duplex pairs and Common Carrier channels are duplex pairs. All other VHF Radio Services are authorized for single frequency simplex.

In the UHF band, 450-470MHz (and 422-429MHz in the Lake Erie area), channels usually consist of a pair of frequencies. The two are spaced 5.0000MHz apart.

UHF-T channels, 470-512MHz, always have two frequencies that are spaced 3.0000MHz apart.

For both UHF bands, the lower of the two frequencies is assigned to the base station or repeater. The higher frequency of the two is used by mobiles and control stations transmitting to the station or repeater. In some instances, the high side may be used for unit-to-unit communications.

806-894MHz channels are always paired, with a separation of 45.0000MHz. Unlike UHF, the higher frequency is the base frequency, and the lower frequency is for mobiles and control stations.

Base/repeater stations 935-941MHz are paired with mobile/control channels 39MHz lower, in the 896- 902MHz band.

Examples of frequency pairs:

- 33.4800 Base/repeater and mobiles
  33.8200 Control station and mobiles
- 153.9950 Base/repeater and mobiles
  155.7400 Control station and mobiles
- 453.0000 Base/repeater and mobiles
  458.0000 Control station and mobiles
- 470.0125 Base/repeater and mobiles
  473.0125 Control station and mobiles
- 820.0125 Control station and mobiles
  865.0125 Base/repeater and mobiles
- 896.9125 Control station and mobiles
  935.0125 Base/repeater and mobiles

As previously noted, with any two-frequency channel, one of the frequencies (F-1) is used for base-to-mobile, while the other (F-2) is mobile-to-base. If the base is a repeater, F-2 is retransmitted on F-1 and can be heard by other mobiles. If the base does not repeat, a transmission by a mobile cannot be heard by other mobiles. Mobile units operating on two-frequency channels (except Common Carrier) can switch their transmitters to the base (F-1) frequency. When they do this, they can communicate directly with other mobiles without having the signal go through a repeater. This is called the talk-around mode.

There are many different functions within a single department, and ideally, there should be one or more channels for each function:

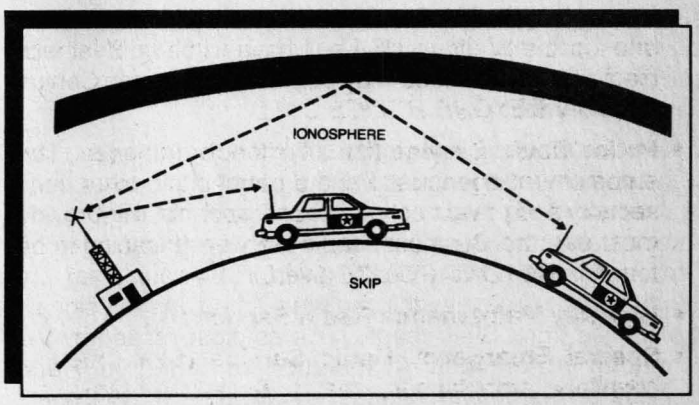
■ Police channels:
- Dispatch.
- Mutual aid and/or intersystem.
- Tactical (unit-to-unit and localized incidents within a small area).
- Investigators.
- Traffic control.
- Surveillance.
- Special events.
- Administrative.
- S.W.A.T.
- Telephone patch.

■ Fire suppression channels:
- Dispatch (voice and paging)
- Response (en route and at emergency scene)
- Mutual aid
- Fireground
- Rescue (if a Fire Department function)
- Command
- Telephone patch

■ Ambulance/Rescue channels:
- Dispatch
- Hospital-to-ambulance
- Paramedic (Paramedics have received special training and can administer treatment and medication under radio supervision by a doctor)

9. SKIP - VOICES FROM AFAR

In the opening chapter, it was stated that the range of signals at VHF and higher frequencies was approximately line-of-sight. There are some interesting exceptions to this rule.



Skip. Strange — and not fully understood — events occur on our sun that affect radio transmissions. Sunspots are magnetic storms on the sun. The number of such storms increases to a maximum and then decreases to a minimum over a period of from nine to fourteen years. The average is eleven years, and is called the "sunspot cycle." 1990-1991 were peak years of the current cycle.

(During the years between 1645 and 1715, astronomers worldwide recorded no sunspots. This period is known as the "Maunder minimum" in honor of British astronomer Edward Maunder, who made this discovery from the examination of observatory records.)

The earth's atmosphere, from about 50 to 400 miles up, is called the ionosphere, or Kennelly-Heaviside layer (honoring an American and an Englishman who independently discovered its effects). It is divided into four sub-layers: D, E, F1 and F2. Depending on the season and time of day, radio waves from about 500KHz to 20MHz are reflected by the ionosphere and heard at great distances from the transmitter. Normally it is a transparent window to radio waves above 25MHz. However, forces from the sunspots change the F2 layer into a "mirror" for VHF-low band frequencies. The radio waves are reflected back to earth at distances up to several thousand miles from the transmitter, often as strong as if the station were just a few miles away.

There are sub-cycles with the main cycle. Skip is strongest in the spring and fall months, and then mostly during daylight hours. During skip season, it begins with the low end of the band around sunrise at the western end of the path. As it becomes more intense, it is heard at higher and higher frequencies. It will peak when the sun is mid-way between the transmitting and receiving points. If the skip path is between the east and west coasts, that will occur around 1:30 pm (EST). The highest frequency may vary from day to day, and is known as the maximum usable frequency (muf). Around mid-day (EST), the skip will begin to fade and the usable frequencies will decrease. At about sundown, it will fade out.

During periods of intense skip, listeners in the eastern part of the United States may hear signals from Europe and Africa during morning hours, and then from the western part of our own country later in the day. The broadcasts from Europe will mostly be from military installations — including our own forces stationed there — because the 30-50MHz band is not used for civilian two-way radio in that area. Listeners in the Western USA will have to be content with catching signals from the Midwest, east coast and Central and South America.

Many hobbyists specialize in monitoring skip. The differences in radio language and dispatching in other parts of the nation are fascinating. Speech accents will provide some clues as to where the transmissions are coming from. Time announcements (usually given in 24-hour time) are another clue, since they tell you what time zone the signals are coming from. State maps, such as those issued by the American Automobile Association or found in Rand McNally or Hammond Atlases are invaluable. Webster's New Geographical Dictionary is another excellent resource for locating the origin of skip.

Short skip of several hundred miles occurs occasionally and unpredictably. During the period when nuclear weapons were being tested above ground in this country, detonations were frequently followed by periods of short skip. Columnist Gordon West, an expert in these matters, notes that unusual skip may occur during periods of extreme solar flares. These flares, that disrupt regular radio communications, may create skip conditions up to 200MHz. for several days.

Ducting is a form of skip that sometimes affects VHF-high band. The signals appear to be conducted along a path between various layers in the lower atmosphere. The signals may travel up to several hundred miles. Ducting usually occurs near the sea coasts and in springtime.

10. TONES

A high-quality stereo system can reproduce sounds to 20,000 cycles per second (cps) and higher. Mobile radios are deliberately designed to cut off tones above 3,000 cps. Most human speech sounds are in the range of 300-1500 cps. The audio frequencies below 300 cps and above 1500 cps are used for a variety of signaling purposes associated with the use of two-way radio.

The best known use of audio tones is in the touch-tone telephone. The tones are used to dial numbers and perform switching functions. The AT&T method is known as "dual tone multi-frequency" (DTMF) signaling. Each touch of a button on the standard touch-tone phone generates two precise audio frequencies. Tuned filters in the system receive the various combinations, and in turn activate different circuits and devices.

Many types of tones, including DTMF, are used in mobile radio. Tones may be used to selectively call (Selcall) one or more units, protect receivers from unwanted noise or active remote devices by radio. The circuit that creates the tone for the transmitter is called an encoder, while the receiver uses a decoder to recognize and act upon the proper tone.

Dual squelch. The standard squelch circuit in a radio receiver locks out the background noise when no signal is being received. The Continuous Tone Coded Squelch System (CTCSS), known by trade names such as Motorola's Private Line (PL) and General Electric's Channel Guard (CG), locks out unwanted signals from other fleets sharing a channel. It also locks out most intermod and spurious noises when no signal is being received.

CTCSS uses tones between 60 cps and 300 cps. There are 32 standard and several non-standard tones. They are transmitted simultaneously with the voice message, and serve to open up the audio system of the receiver. In commercial two-way radio equipment, the tones are filtered out and not heard through the loudspeaker. Scanner users will hear them as a soft buzzing sound. However, if not properly adjusted, CTCSS can rattle the scanner speaker.

Digital squelch is an improvement over CTCSS. Instead of tones, an almost inaudible digital signal is used to open the properly equipped receivers. Digital squelch offers a larger number of combinations. It is marketed under the trade names Digital Private Line (DPL) by Motorola, Digital Channel Guard (DCG) by GE, and others.

In a widespread system requiring several repeaters for complete radio coverage, operator selectable CTCSS or digital squelch may be used to choose the nearest repeater.

The "ch—p" sound heard at the end of a radio transmission is called "squelch tail." High quality professional mobile radio equipment incorporates circuitry that eliminates this sound.

Tone signaling is used in many formats other than DTMF: 2+2 (two tones simultaneously followed by another two tones), 1+1, single tones and digital signaling.

2+2 and 1+1 are used for small paging systems, fire department alerting and activating remote devices. The use of two or four tones reduces the possibility of false signals.

Single tone "beeps" are the simplest, and mainly used to select repeaters in a large system. Single tones are usually found in the range between 1500 cps and 3000 cps.

High-capacity paging systems and computer dispatching use tones to encode digital signals. Their rate of transmission is extremely rapid. There are two distinct types of sound, described either as the "chirp of a cricket" or a "turkey caller."

11. TECHNOLOGY

Security

There are several methods in use to prevent outsiders from eavesdropping on radio communications.

Voice scrambling is technically known as "speech inversion." The voice is distorted in such a way as to be unintelligible to the listener not equipped with an

"unscrambler." A scrambled message sounds somewhat like Donald Duck talking. The availability of add-on unscramblers for scanners makes this method virtually useless where national security and organized crime activities are concerned.

For Federal use, the National Security Agency developed and mandated a Data Encryption Standard. Using this standard, mobile radio manufacturers have designed digital encryption systems (DES). DES converts the voice to a digital code. On a radio not equipped to decode DES, a transmission just sounds like a carrier with no modulation. DES equipped radios have a switch enabling them to operate in "clear" or "security" mode.

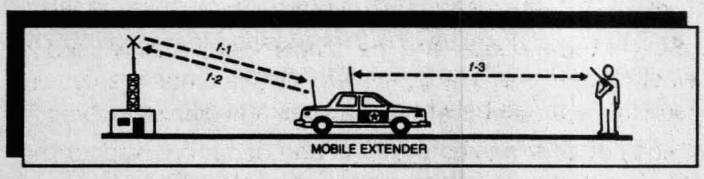
There's no secret to DES. Its security lies in the fact that there are 720,000,000,000,000,000 different codes, or keys. The key can be changed as often as desired. Programming begins with a "key-loader," which looks like a large pocket calculator. Numbers are entered at random to select the key (it is left to you to figure out a way of doing this so that no one knows what the key is). Using a small cable, the key-loader is then plugged into each radio for a moment, transferring the selected key to the decoding circuit in the radio.

Digital security is offered in two versions: one for the Federal Government and one for non-Federal use. Trade names for the system include Motorola's Digital Voice Privacy (DVP), and GE's Digital Voice Guard (DVG).

Improving talk-back range

Visualize a healthy father playing ball with his seven year old son. How far apart can they be from each other? Obviously, only as far as the son can throw the ball. The analogy extends to mobile radio. The range of a high-power base station far exceeds that of a low-power portable, but the effective range of the system is limited to the range of the portable. Several techniques are used to equalize that range.

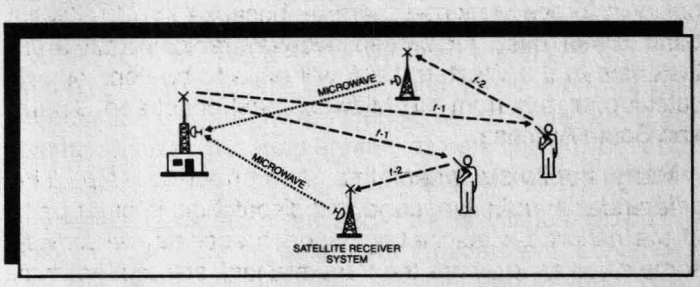
The extender or vehicular repeater makes use of a vehicle's high-power mobile radio to greatly increase the talk-back range of a nearby portable.



The extender is a special type of two-way repeater that is connected to the mobile radio in a vehicle. Signals from the base station are received by the mobile radio and repeated to the portable by the extender. Transmissions from the portable are received by the extender and retransmitted to the base by the high-power mobile radio.

The process seems simple until you consider some of the problems involved. At the scene of an incident, there may be a number of extender-equipped vehicles, possibly some of them arriving and leaving during the incident. To avoid interference, only one extender should be in operation at any given time. This is done automatically by circuitry that is far too complicated to describe here. A second requirement is that the portable must have priority: in an emergency it must be able to take over the extender and transmit to the base, even if the extender is in the middle of relaying a transmission from the base. This, too, is handled automatically by special circuitry.

A second method of increasing talk-back range is by the use of satellite receivers placed throughout the area of radio coverage. These are connected to the base station by telephone lines, fixed relay transmitters or microwave circuits.



Again, what sounds simple, isn't. A signal from a portable or mobile may be received by several satellite receivers. One satellite might be receiving loud and clear, while others are receiving static and/or broken-up signals. If the dispatcher had to listen to all of them, it would be a most difficult job.

Instead of going directly to the dispatcher's loudspeaker, all signals from the satellite receivers are connected to a voter. This electronic device compares all of the signals, selects the one with the best voice quality, and connects it to the dispatcher's speaker. The process is continuous, so that any change is immediately detected and the connections altered if required.

A remote base station transmitter may be collocated with a satellite receiver. An indicator informs the dispatcher as to which site is receiving the best signal, thus allowing the dispatcher to select the best transmitter. The latter may also be done automatically by the voter circuit.

Improved Talk-out Range

There may be circumstances where the range required is greater than that which may be obtained from a single transmitting site. Multicasting (mistakenly called "simulcasting" by many agencies) involves the use of two or more radio transmitting sites operting on different frequencies. Units in the field either use scanning to find the strongest signal, or manually switch frequencies as they operate in the different areas.

More often, circumstances require that only one frequency be used over the entire area. Transmitting from different radio sites on the same frequency is called simulcasting. Using two standard transmitters at the same time and on the same frequency creates unacceptable problems. No transmitter is perfect. Many factors can cause a transmitter to stray slightly off its assigned frequency. Recognizing this, FCC rules allow a certain "tolerance," or deviation from the assigned frequency, usually about 750 Hz (cycles per second) above or below. In order to provide complete coverage over a wide area, the signals from two transmitters would overlap a large part of the entire area. If one transmitter was low, and the other high, the mixing in the overlapping area would create a beat frequency of up to 1500 cycles that would come through every loudspeaker as a high-pitched whine.

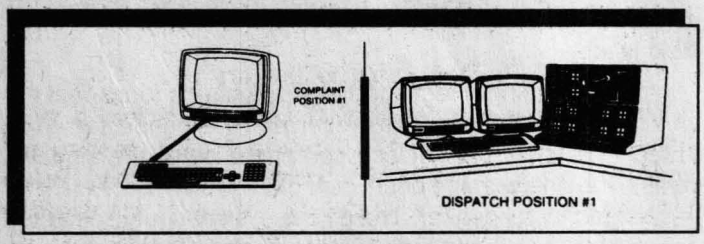
Another problem. Being different distances from the dispatcher, the two transmitters would be "out of phase" (we won't go into the details) and parts of the messages could be garbled.

To overcome these problems, the transmitters are synchronized. Special transmitters with a tolerance limited to about 75 Hz are used. At worst, a beat note would be a very low humming sound. Special lines are used to connect the transmitters to the dispatch point, and the signal in the lines may be adjusted so that the transmitters are "in phase" and there is no distortion.

You can usually tell if a broadcast is simulcast. Listen very closely to the background noise. If you hear a slight "wavering" sound, it's probably being caused by two transmitters being on the air simultaneously. However, if you are very close to one of them, you may not hear this.

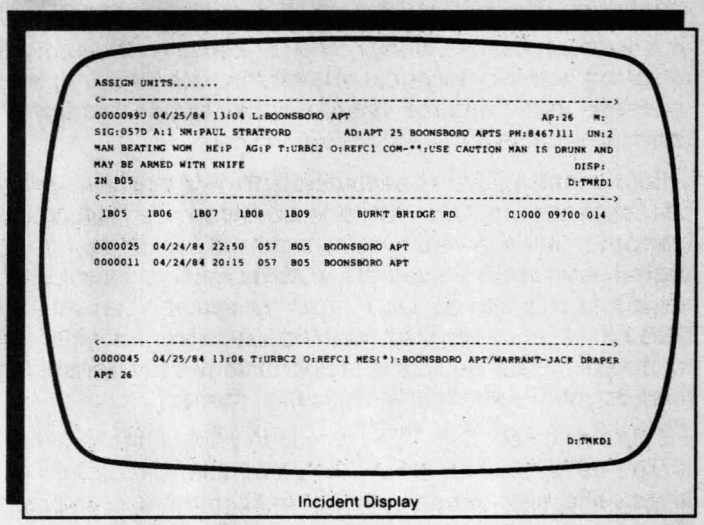
Dispatching



Computer Aided Dispatching (CAD) reduces the possibility of error, expedites response, eases the burden on the dispatcher, saves valuable air time and provides relevant information quickly and in a useful format.

Typically, a computerized emergency radio communications center has a complaint operator with a single video data terminal (VDT) and a radio dispatcher with dual VDTs. A center serving a population of several million persons might have thirty or more of each, while in a tiny village, one person could serve both functions. Large centers are usually custom designed.

There is a growing trend to consolidate police, fire and medical aid dispatching: one center for all services; one to serve several communities; or, a center for all agencies within a county.



Incident Display

Example. A call is received by a complaint taker, who completes a form such as the sample above. Most of the information is automatically inserted by the computer (indicated by a "*"):

- *Incident #99 is unassigned ("U").
- *The call came in at 1:04pm on April 25, 1984.
- The location of the incident is apartment #26 at the Boonsboro apartments *in the city.
- The complaint is a "code 57D," which is a *"priority 1" call.
- The person calling is Paul Stratford in *apartment #25 and his *phone number is 846-7311.
- *This call requires two units to be dispatched.
- *"Signal [code] 57D" is a "man beating a woman." *The call came in by phone.
- *Police action is required.
- *The complaint operator's ID is "REFC1" and the dispatcher is "URBC2."
- An additional note is "Use caution man is drunk and may be armed with a knife."
- *Five units in the area are available for the incident, which is on Burnt Bridge Road.
- *The day before, unit 1B05 responded to two calls of the same kind at the same address.
- *There is a warrant for a Jack Draper who lives in apartment #26 at that address.

As you can see, the only information that had to be manually entered was the location of the incident, the nature of the incident, the complainant's name and the additional comment. Everything else was done by the computer. At the touch of a key, the incident report is transferred to one of the dispatcher's two screens, ready to be broadcast. The entire procedure, requiring less than 30 seconds, would have taken several minutes to do manually.

Each incident generates a new record, in which is kept all the details of the call until it is completed and the information stored for future reference. The dispatcher has a wealth of information available on demand: incident records, logs of each unit, status of all units, etc. In addition, the dispatcher is able to access the many computer networks that provide data on vehicle registration, stolen vehicles, wanted suspects, etc. Some of these nets are maintained by the state, while others are nationwide in scope.

Increasingly, CAD is becoming a two-way procedure. In its simplest form, the vehicle is equipped with automated status-reporting equipment. A small box attached to the radio has five or more buttons, each representing a common status report: "In service," "call received," "arriving at location," "out of service," "help needed," etc. Pushing one of the buttons sends a rapid digital burst over the radio to the dispatch VDT, where it is displayed. The dispatcher's VDT constantly shows the current status of every vehicle.

The most advanced CAD systems use a mobile data terminal (MDT) in each vehicle. Its a miniature computer, complete with typewriter keyboard and screen. Since most messages are sent back and forth by CAD, voice messages are reduced to a minimum. MDTs not only exchange messages with the dispatcher, but with other MDTs in the field. The MDT operates through a separate mobile radio, using a frequency dedicated exclusively for data. The sound of a data burst has been compared to that of a squeaky cabinet door or a cricket.

When a field MDT sends a request for information that might be stored in a state or national data bank (e.g., stolen vehicle information), the message may be automatically switched into the network without dispatcher intervention (patrolling a lonely desert road north of Los Angeles, a sheriff's deputy is able to learn, in seconds, that the car ahead of him was stolen in New York).

Vehicle location mapping

Automatic Vehicle Location (AVL) is another step in computerized dispatching. While there are several different AVL systems, they all produce a map on a video screen that shows the current location of all AVL equipped vehicles. The dispatcher can control the map scale, "zooming" in and back. At it's largest scale, the map only shows major streets over a wide area. Choosing any point on the map, the dispatcher can gradually zoom in until the map shows every street and alley in clear detail for several city blocks around the selected point.

The oldest AVL system uses radio signals transmitted by the Loran C network, which was originally designed to allow ships and aircraft to determine their own positions. A Loran C radio in the vehicle receives the low-frequency signals and calculates the location of the vehicle. Using a separate mobile radio frequency, the equipment at the dispatch location interrogates ("asks") each vehicle unit, every few seconds, to report back its calculated position. This is then displayed on the screen map.

The Loran C system has its problems. It's expensive, requiring a special Loran C unit and a separate mobile radio. Loran C does not work well in all parts of the country at ground level. Because it uses a very low frequency, there are many places where it may fade out: near overhead wires and large buildings, beneath bridges and underpasses, and in commercial garage structures, to name a few. It also requires two antennas, making it impractical for unmarked law enforcement vehicles.

A second system uses "dead reckoning." An on-board computer constantly measures a vehicle's direction and distance of travel from a known starting point, to calculate location. The information is transmitted, on interrogation, to the screen map. During travel, small errors enter the system, and it must be recalibrated frequently.

The third system uses remote radio triangulation. The base system consists of a number of transmitters and receivers, so located that the area of coverage is within range of at least two of the receivers. Vehicles are equipped with a small transponder radio. When the location of a vehicle is required, the base system sends out an interrogating signal. When the transponder receives its special code, it replies with a short radio burst. The base receivers use this to determine the location of the vehicle and send that information to the screen map.

The transponder is small, and since it operates in the 800MHz band, requires a very small antenna. The entire package is very practical for installation on a motorcycle. Future models will be small and light enough to be carried on a person's belt. This equipment is also being offered for installation in privately owned vehicles to locate them in the event they are stolen.

Stolen vehicle locators

When a vehicle equipped with LoJac is stolen, a small transmitter operating on 173.075 is activated, sending out coded pulses for one-fifth of a second every second. Police vehicles equipped with a locator can determine the direction and strength of the signal, the latter indicating whether they are getting closer or farther from the subject. Locator-equipped police cars can be identified by the array of four high-band antennas on the roof. The advantages of LoJac are that it operates nationwide and is relatively inexpensive. It's disadvantages are that it usually requires at least two police vehicles to get a "fix," the need for the four roof- top antennas precludes its use in "unmarked" police vehicles, and the signal may be distorted in areas with many high-rise buildings.

The Teletrac system utilizes triangulation to pinpoint the location of a stolen vehicle and display it on a map appearing on a computer screen at Headquarters. The radio signal is a "spread-spectrum" burst in the 900 MHz band. As the vehicle moves, so does its indicator on the map. Teletrac advantages are that it does not require any equipment in police vehicles, and shows the exact location of the subject. Its disadvantages are higher cost, limited availability, and fact that it will only function within the range of a system. It is the same system mentioned above for AVL.

Technological Tidbits

Law enforcement is constantly seeking ways to lower the profile of their radio equipment, especially in surveillance situations. The Ear-Mike is a dual-purpose device. It's a receiver ear-piece that also serves as a microphone. Voice is conducted to the earpiece through the facial bones, and the transmitter is voice activated (VOX).

Another development is a very tiny earpiece — it looks like a hearing aid — that has no wires to the radio receiver. Incoming signals are transferred from the receiver to the earpiece by a method known as induction, which will work over a range of about four feet.

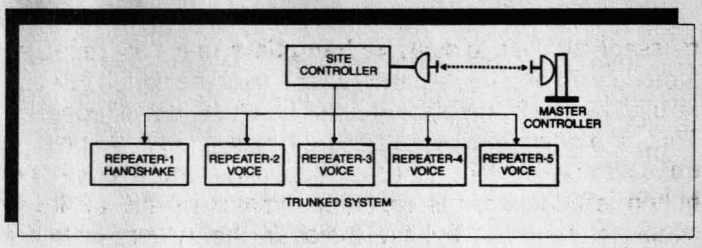
Special models of portable radios are made to be used with concealed microphones and earpieces. Known as "flatpacks," these units have no internal microphone or speaker, allowing them to be smaller and more easily concealed. This type of equipment is available only to law enforcement agencies.

Using radio — especially portables — inside tunnels, high-rise buildings, and underground structures has always been a problem. This is solved by using "leaky coax," marketed under brand names such as Radiax. In regular coax cable, the radio signal is confined to the center conductor by the outer shield braid. Leaky coax is, in effect, a very long antenna. The outer shield has carefully designed gaps that allow radio signals to escape or be captured. The amount of power escaping at any one point is very tiny, but in a tunnel, it may only have to travel a few dozen yards. Mobile and portable equipment used by law enforcement agencies has become "intelligent." Using a special programmer, or even an ordinary personal computer, frequencies, tones and other attributes can be quickly changed. A single programmed radio may then be connected — momentarily — to another radio and the attributes transferred, or cloned. Some models may even be programmed over the air remotely from the master control station. A lost or stolen radio can be disabled by a signal from master control, rendering the radio useless. One of the newest features is the ability to turn on the transmitter of a field unit and listen to any nearby conversations. At least one stolen portable has already been recovered, and the thief jailed, using this feature.

12. TRUNKING

Up to this point, we have been discussing conventional radio systems. Regardless of the total number of channels in the system, a complete message between a station and units in the field takes place on one channel. Changing channels requires the operators at both ends to manually make the switch. There can be problems with this system. In a community with several Government departments (police, fire, animal regulation, etc.) channel use may be very inefficient. At any given time, some of the channels may be so busy that messages are delayed, while other channels are lightly used or not used at all. When several departments share a single frequency, they may cause interference to each other.

Trunking is a system of frequency utilization that eliminates the above problems. Trunking is similar to a visit to the bank. Instead of a line in front of each window, everyone gets into one line and is assigned to the next available teller. Telephone companies have used Trunking for years. When a call is placed from Chicago to New York, for example, it first goes to a central exchange in Chicago. From there, many trunk lines go to New York. The phone company computer selects a line that is not in use and routes the call to the New York office, where it is connected to the party being called.



In a trunked radio system, all stations and mobile units share a group of five or more channels. A large agency may have a trunking system all to itself. In a small or medium size community, the system may be shared by police, fire and other public services. During the day, when police departments aren't too busy, the non-emergency services may use most of the air time. At night, police will use the lion's share of channels. The system may be shared with several communities. Trunking assures full and equal usage of each channel and prevents one department from "stepping on" another while it is transmitting. Trunking also has its problems, which will be subsequently noted.

There are two types of Trunking systems: Specialized Mobile Radio (SMR) and Sole User. The SMR is owned and operated by a private entrepreneur for profit. The operator charges a monthly fee to allow business firms to share the system. Each user is called a "fleet," and each may have sub-fleets. SMR's may include telephone interconnect at an extra charge, providing the user with a two-way radio system and a mobile telephone system in one radio (trunked interconnect should not be confused with common carrier mobile telephone systems). The SMR is licensed to the entrepreneur. The individual users do not require a license. A Sole User would have to be a large company or government entity, since the FCC requires a minimum of 70 mobile units for each channel in the system, or 350 mobiles for a five-channel system.

How Public Safety Trunking Works

While the basics are the same, Public Safety trunked systems are far more sophisticated than SMR's. There may be forty channels or more in a Public Safety system. The entire system is managed by a computer known as the Site Controller.

In a basic system, one channel serves as the control or handshake channel. The control channel is switched to a different repeater each day, and can be recognized by the continuous loud buzzing noise, which is data being sent out. Every radio automatically tunes to the handshake channel. When a microphone button is pressed, the signal goes to the Site Controller, which selects an unused repeater and sends a data signal that switches all other radios in that group to the selected channel.

The entire system may be under the direction of a Master Control Center (MCC), with the Site Controller collocated with it. They are linked to the repeater sites by microwave or dedicated telephone circuits. The various dispatching locations, in turn, would either be linked to the MCC or have their own control stations.

The system may use message trunking or transmission trunking, and possibly a combination of both. With message trunking, a delay, or hang time keeps the repeater turned on for several seconds after a user is through talking, so that the other person's reply will be on the same repeater. Thus, the entire exchange can be heard on one channel. If transmission trunking is used, each time the microphone button is released, the repeater remains on the air for a couple of seconds, but the radios in the system instantly switch back to the control channel. The purpose of the delay is to keep scanners from following the change.

Trunked systems that cover a large area may get complicated, yet be easier to listen to. The frequencies may be divided into groups, each covering a smaller area and each having a separate control channel. Within a group of frequencies, the same frequency may be used at several locations (simulcasting). In a very widespread system, a combination of simulcasting and multicasting may be used. You can have a lot of fun just figuring how the whole system works. You can find clues by noting the locations and call signs shown in POLICE CALL.

Each radio in a Public Safety system has an individual identification (ID) number, and each can be separately programmed for the functions it must perform. A portable or mobile radio may even be programmed and reprogrammed by remote control from the MCC. If a radio is lost or stolen, the MCC has the capability of disabling it so that it cannot transmit or receive messages.

All radios in the system are preprogrammed with multiple sets of instructions, which may differ from radio to radio. Units may be divided into "fleets" — Police, fire, etc. Within the fleet, there may be many sub-fleets. Each precinct in a police department might constitute a sub-fleet, receiving its own messages and no others. Groupings can be different within each radio. At the turn of a selector switch or pressing a combination of buttons, police sergeants may communicate in private with other sergeants, or fire equipment responding to two different incidents prevented from interfering with each other. Mobiles and portables can be programmed to scan several fleets. For close-range communications at a fireground or tactical situation, field units may have the capability of switching to a direct talk-around mode.

There may be times when all the repeaters are in use. Then, the next request for a channel goes into a waiting line (queue) that is part of the Site Controller program. When a trunked system is shared by different departments, each fleet may be assigned a priority level. Rescue units might have first priority, Police, second priority, and down the line, perhaps with building inspectors having the lowest priority. As soon as a channel is available, the highest priority fleet is assigned to it. This process is automatic and operates at computer speed.

What happens when there is a situation so critical that no delay is acceptable? Each radio is equipped with an "emergency" button that, when activated, immediately cuts off the user with the lowest priority and assigns that channel to the unit with the emergency. This is sometimes referred to as "ruthless preemption."

In the event of a Site Controller failure, there is a backup feature known as "fail-soft." In the Motorola system, each fleet is preassigned to one of the repeaters. When a malfunction occurs, the system reverts to a conventional repeater mode. The GE trunked system distributes the logic among all the repeaters. Should the controller fail, the system still functions in the trunking mode, but without the special features that are programmable by the Control Center.

Trunked systems currently operate in the 800 MHz band, but there is no technical reason to prevent Trunking from being applied to other bands in the near future. The Government has allocated at least twenty channels in the 406-420 MHz band for trunking at Federal facilities, and a number are already in service at military installations. We can expect to see conventional UHF channels converted to trunking within the next few years.

Disadvantages of trunking? The system and radios are far more expensive than conventional equipment. Operation of field equipment may be too complicated for some users, especially those who only use it occasionally. Finally, there have been instances of system failure due to overload during a major emergency.

Monitoring a Trunked System

In the POLICE CALL entries, you will notice that the frequencies for each trunked system (T) fall into two ranges: 806-824 MHz and 851-869 MHz. Mobiles and control station transmit on the lower range, while the repeater use the higher range. Always listen to the higher range (851-869 MHz).

Enter all the repeater channels in your scanner. Begin with the highest frequency and enter them in descending order. Lock out the control channel. Once or twice each day, listen to all the channels, locking out the new handshake channel and unlocking the old one. Make a list of the channels used for control over a two week period. You may find that one or more channels are never used as the handshake channel, or even for voice communications. These are "holes" in the system.

A hole is probably being reserved for a special purpose: Telephone patch-through, fireground, tactical, paging or computer dispatching. A paging channel may carry all emergency broadcasts from the entire system. If the hole is not being used for data, it's certainly worth keeping in a bank of your scanner.

Some trunked system operators may set aside non-trunked channels for fireground, tactical or localized operation. In POLICE CALL, these would be listed as Local Government (L) frequencies. In scanning a trunked system, be sure to include these in your scan set-up.

In a system shared by several agencies, usage may vary according to the time of day. During normal business hours, the majority of the channels may be taken up with routine functions: work crews, inspectors, etc. At night, the focus will shift to law enforcement.

In a large system, you may hear two or more control channels. This indicates that there are sub-systems, each with its own set of channels. In the Part I records, sub-systems may have different call signs. Make a list of all the frequencies, and under each, note the mobile unit numbers, and if possible the stations that use it. It shouldn't take too long to figure out which frequencies form the groups having the same units on them. Careful! Units can jump from one sub-system to another when necessary. Just double-check your paperwork.

If the above method fails, you can construct a chart similar to the following, but it may take weeks to complete.

This chart assumes that there are three (3) control channels, indicating three sub-systems, for a total of 15 channels. Replace F-1, F-2, etc., with the actual frequencies you are monitoring.

Each time you listen for the handshake channels and hear two or more at the same time, put an "X" wherever any two of them intersect across and down. In the above chart, F-1, F-5 and F-12, for example, were heard as data channels at the same time. Each has to be on a different sub-system.

Eventually, your chart will look like the second illustration. Reading each channel across and then down shows which frequencies go together. In the above, the groups are: 1-2-9-11-15, 3-5-7-10-13 and 4-6-8-12-14.

You may want to use two scanners, with one dedicated to the local trunked system. Alternatively, if the system is large, you may want to split the channels up.

A smaller police agency may use a hybrid trunking system. This consists of a few exclusive channels in conjunction with a local SMR system. During the day, the exclusive channels are able to handle all the messages. At night, at the same time as police activity increases, the use of an SMR by businesses decreases, and the SMR channels are tied into the police system for overflow traffic.

There are reports that some small towns and counties are using SMR's for law enforcement and/or fire suppression. This could be dangerous, since few if any SMR's have the safety features of Public Safety trunked systems.

HOW TO USE POLICE CALL

POLICE CALL is packed with useful information. Some of it is not obvious at first glance. You're going to have to do a little work to get the most out of POLICE CALL..

Unlisted Frequencies

There are some stations licensed in the Public Safety Radio Services that are not listed in POLICE CALL:

- Digital and/or tone-only paging.
- Point-to-point digital and/or tone-only data transmission.
- Systems licensed on a private trunked SMR (see: 12. TRUNKING). These few systems share the SMR with dozens of private firms, and therefore the FCC just cross-references their license to the SMR license.

Part I

Each line in Part I is a record. Each item in a record is a field. There's useful information in every field. Every year, POLICE CALL processes approximately 70,000 records, representing new licenses, modifications, transfers, expirations and renewals.

NAME. This is the name of the licensee as it appears on the license. Our editing process may modify the name to conform to our standard format: That's because licenses are issued just the way the applicant sends them in. A license may read, "Townville, City Of," "Townville, Alabama," "City of Townville," etc. In POLICE CALL, they'll all appear as "TOWNVILLE CITY OF." Another example: the State of California appears fourteen different ways on different licenses, but in POLICE CALL, they're all under "CALIFORNIA STATE OF." Note, though, that some government agencies have a separate name: agencies such as Toll Road Commissions and Universities. These are listed in their own name and in accordance with our format.

Private firms (such as ambulance companies, hospitals, veterinarians and school bus companies) may have two names: an official name and a "doing business as" (dba) name. "Bill Jones Associates," a legal name, may be known to you as "Townville Ambulance." The license requires the legal name, but often includes the dba. Whenever both are shown on the license, POLICE CALL will use the dba. NOTE: Some ambulance firms use frequencies in the Business Radio Service, and are not listed in POLICE CALL, but are listed in BEYOND POLICE CALL.

There is another feature of POLICE CALL that you may not have noticed. Look up any licensee name that begins with "ST," as the abbreviation for "Saint." You will find it alphabetized as if it were spelled out "SAINT" instead of being alphabetized as "ST." The same holds true for all abbreviations, such as "Fort," "Mount," "Port," "South," etc.

The FCC does not provide specific information on the use of a licensed frequency. You will notice that many records have such information in parentheses: "(fireground)," "(F-1 west)," etc. This unofficial information is provided voluntarily by readers and "plugged-in" to our data. While we strive for accuracy, we cannot guarantee it.

If you have such information, please take a moment and send it to us. All we ask is that you type or print the information, and include the FCC call sign. If you would like to become one of our Major Contributors, drop us a note. Our deadline for the 1996 Edition is September 9, 1995.

TRANSMITTER CITY. The license shows the city or town closest to the actual location of the transmitter. A remote base station or repeater may be located in another community: in some instances, it might be in another county or even across a state line.

SER (Service). See the inside front cover of this book for an explanation of the abbreviations shown in this column. Also see the comments about "service sharing" in section 7. "Federal Communications Commission" (above).

FREQ MHz (Frequency). Some scanners do not display all four digits after the decimal point in a frequency. They may show the first three digits (470.412 for 470.4125), or round off to the nearest "0" or "5" ("470.4125" would round down to "470.410" or up to "470.250"). Always enter the complete frequency: The radio will still receive the correct frequency, even if the display is not 100% accurate.

In the 450-470 MHz band, you will find many frequencies with a "5" in the fourth place after the decimal point (4xx.xxx5). If you look at the Consolidated Frequency List in the back of this book, you will discover that these are all low-power frequencies. They are known as "splits," and can be used as base, mobile, repeater, control or fixed relay stations. More on these in the discussion of "NO OF STATIONS" (below).

Some legally used frequencies are not on individual licenses. For example, a county can have a license for all the mobiles in the county that share a mutual aid or fireground frequency. The state can do the same with a mutual aid channel. Only base stations have to have separate licenses. A trunked system may be shared by several agencies, but only the operating agency is required to have a license.

In many areas, from an extended community to an entire state, one particular (discrete) frequency may be assigned to every law enforcement agency. Another may be licensed to every fire department. These are intersystem or mutual aid channels: They could be either or both. They provide a common channel to allow different agencies to cooperate with each other.

Mutual aid:

- 45.86 Police
- 45.88 Fire
- 154.265 Fire
- 154.280 Fire
- 154.295 Fire
- 155.475 Law Enforcement nationwide
- 866.0125 Calling nationwide
- 866.5125 Tactical nationwide
- 867.0125 Tactical nationwide
- 867.5125 Tactical nationwide
- 868.0125 Tactical nationwide

CALL SIGN. FCC call signs for land-mobile systems begin with the letters "K" or "W" and usually consist of three or four letters and three numbers (e.g., KAA211 and WNAA211). The three numbers never begin with "1" or "0." When a system consists only of mobile and/or portable units, or mobiles and portables that will be communicating with several different systems, a call sign with two letters and four or five numbers is issued (e.g., KA4444 or KA55555).

When there are several stations, all under the control of one location, the FCC may issue a system license with just one call sign for all the transmitters, including mobiles. With a system license, all police, fire and local government functions may sometimes operate under just one call sign.

The FCC has reissued old expired call signs to new licensees. However, most calls signs for new stations appear to be in a series beginning with "WP——." Call signs beginning with "WNT——" have been reserved for special types of stations. A few new licenses are also being issued with call signs beginning "WI——."

Radio systems must transmit their call signs every fifteen minutes (30 minutes for Public Safety Stations), either by voice or Morse code. The FCC does grant exceptions to this rule, allowing stations to use a unique identifier.

NO OF STATIONS (number of stations). The FCC refers to every single piece of radio equipment — base, portable or mobile — as a "station."

There's a lot of useful information hidden in these statistics. If more than one (1) base (BAS) station is shown in a single record, it could indicate that there are two transmitters at the same location, or several base stations at different locations. If one frequency in a system has more base stations than the others, it is usually indicative of the primary frequency in the system. If only one frequency is shown with a base repeater (BR) or mobile relay (MR), it can be assumed to be the main frequency in the system.

The mobiles (MOB) column also offers some interesting clues. If a city has several "P" frequencies with 243 mobiles on each, and an "L" frequency also with 243 mobiles, The "L" frequency is probably being used by the police. If a state or county has one frequency with an unusually large number of mobiles, it's probably a mutual aid or fireground channel for the entire state or county.

An agency, such as a police department, may have several frequencies using the same call sign and with the same number of mobiles. If there is also a "P" channel with a different call sign and different number of mobiles, it might be the channel for airport or sports arena security, the housing authority, the city attorney or some other law enforcement activity not directly controlled by the police department—well worth investigating. A "P" frequency with a separate license for mobiles only may be used by investigators for surveillance. The 450-470MHz low-power splits (see above) are always licensed as mobiles, no matter how they are used. Splits may be used by police for surveillance or by fire departments at the fireground. If the license is for just one (1) mobile, the frequency is probably being used as a control to, or relay from a remote transmitter site.

One mobile relay (MR) located at a high vantage point may be associated with several control stations (CO). Conversely, it may require several mobile relay stations over a wide area to provide complete radio coverage for one control station.

Centralized dispatching is becoming much more common. One dispatch center may serve several police or fire departments, or both. The station license may be in the name of the dispatching city or county, or a special agency created just for radio dispatching (e.g., South Bay Regional Communications Authority).

Smaller communities may be licensed for mobiles only, which communicate with the base station of a nearby agency, a central dispatch or the county. Look up nearby users listed in Part II. One of these should also have the base station or mobile relay when the agency of primary interest doesn't have one.

The following are some examples of typical systems:

The two UHF frequencies (always licensed as mobiles) are probably used for control and relay to the repeater site.

Part II

This is a cross-reference for Part I. Use Part II to determine what systems use a given frequency. When an unknown station is discovered while searching, Part II will usually help identify it. Always check Part II for each frequency in which you are interested, then go back to Part I to cross-check nearby users.

United States Government

Since 1983, we have been unable to obtain official records of radio systems operated by the United States Government. Much of this information has been provided to us by our readers. Many federal systems are now using digital encryption and cannot be heard on a conventional scanner or receiver. As a matter of policy, we do not print frequencies used by "sensitive" agencies (FBI, Secret Service, etc). Please do not ask us for them.

Federal Government bands:

- 27.56-27.98
- 29.90-30.55
- 32.01-32.99
- 34.01-34.99
- 36.01-36.99
- 38.01-38.99
- 40.01-41.99
- 46.60-46.99
- 49.61-49.98
- 138.00-143.975
- 148.00-150.345
- 162.00-173.9875
- 406.00-419.9875

Aircraft Frequencies

While not a part of the land-mobile services, a few of these have been included in POLICE CALL. The international emergency frequency is 121.5 for all civilian aircraft. The military emergency frequency, 243.0, is only found in top-of-the-line scanners. The entire 230-396MHz band is used by military aircraft. Hot-air and gas balloons frequently use 122.25 and 123.300, while 123.45 is an unofficial "CB for aircraft."

Commercial airlines use the sub-band 128.9-132.0MHz for business messages. Aeronautical Radio Inc. (Airinc) is owned by the airlines to handle business messages when planes are beyond the range of a company's offices. The sub-band 108-118MHz is used for navigational beacons.

Airborne aircraft transmissions may be heard at distances of one hundred miles or more, depending on the plane's altitude. Tower broadcast reception is limited to relatively short range.

Consolidated Frequency List

An exclusive list of almost every frequency and band you can hear on your scanner. You will find this section to be an invaluable aid as you tune different frequencies.

What radio service are you hearing on 158.160? Part VII informs you that it's a public utility (water and/or power). Want to know where to look for the local taxicab company? Just find the frequencies with the code "LX." As noted above, however, the FCC is crossing the lines between services — interservice sharing.

When You Can't Find It

You're stumped. Your town, borough, city or county isn't listed in POLICE CALL, or there are no frequencies for law enforcement and/or fire suppression. There are four possibilities:

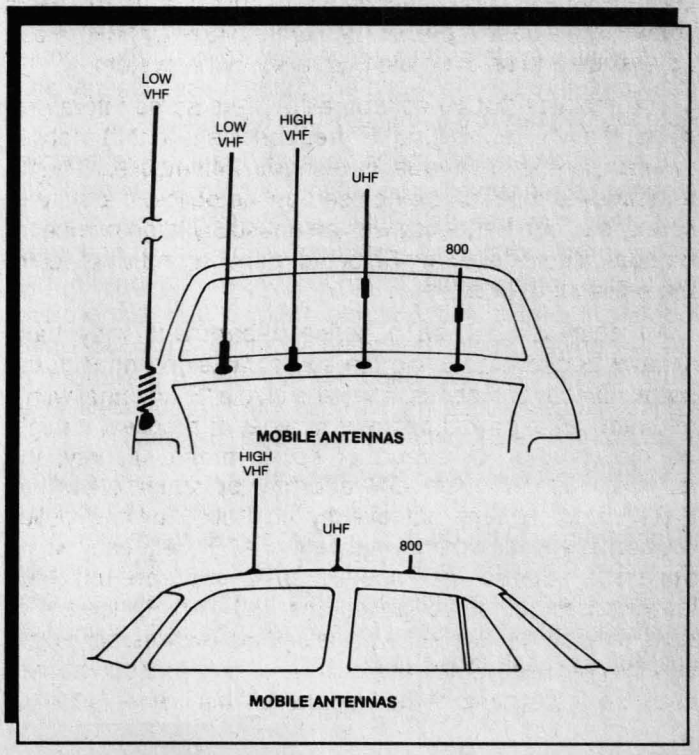
- Your community doesn't have its own services.
- Radio dispatching is provided by another agency.
- Your community is part of an areawide trunked system.
- The FCC license has not been renewed and it is operating illegally.

POLICE CALL can't help with the last one, but the other three may easily be solved. Your local telephone directory will either list your community in a special "Government" section in the front, or alphabetically in the "White Pages." There may be a listing of emergency service telephone numbers inside the front cover (in addition to "911"). You'll probably have to look no further to determine that your community relies on another agency.

Now check the emergency telephone number (other than "911") and see if it matches the phone number of any other nearby agency. Suppose the inside cover listing tells you to call "555-4687" for your town police. Looking over the list, you find the same number for the county police. You may now be fairly certain that your town police are dispatched by the county.

If research still indicates that your community should have its own radio system, there is the possibility that it may be sharing an areawide trunked system (see: 10. TRUNKING). If so, the vehicle antennas will be one of the type listed below under "800MHz." The trunked system will probably be licensed to the county or a nearby larger city.

Are you still stymied because there are so many different bands listed? The vehicle antenna will usually tell you which band to search (a whip is a straight portion of wire; a coil is a thick plastic section):



MOBILE ANTENNAS

- VHF-low — 60-100" whip.
  — 35" whip with a 5" coil at the bottom.
- VHF-high — 18" whip.
  — 40" whip with a 3" coil at the bottom (do not confuse with a similar VHF-low antenna).
- UHF — 6" whip.
  — 32" whip with a 3" coil in the middle.
  — 35" whip that looks like a broadcast antenna with a black or gray plastic band in the middle.
- 800MHz — 3" whip.
  — 18" whip with a coil in the middle. The coil may be covered, or exposed like a pig tail.

There are many types of specialized antennas for use on fire suppression equipment, buses and trains. For "under cover" vehicles, there are a variety of "disguised" and concealed antennas: some look like ordinary AM/FM broadcast antennas. One type is built into the side-view mirror.

Where Are They Hiding?

Law enforcement agencies may regularly be using frequencies other than the obvious ones listed in POLICE CALL. We've already discussed the use of Local Government (L) channels (sometimes, only at night). Many police agencies will use Highway Maintenance Radio Service (R) channels after regular hours. Don't overlook licensed County and State frequencies.

The most difficult to find are frequencies used for surveillance. You will need a great deal of patience to find them: after all, these agencies are going to a great effort to hide them. Start with lightly used, or unused licensed frequencies. Don't overlook the control/mobile frequencies in a repeater system (they have ways to keep the signals from going through the repeater). Seldom used County and State frequencies are to be considered suspect.

Law enforcement agencies may legally use certain frequencies for surveillance without a license. Under FCC rules, they may use any Public Safety frequency (not just Police), provided that the equipment is low-power and does not cause interference to any licensed station! In the 453MHz, 458MHz, 460MHz and 465MHz bands, there are 120 low-power "splits" (frequencies ending in ".xxx5") that could conceivably be used for surveillance without a license. Consider placing all suspected frequencies in a separate bank and include it in your scan pattern.

With the new radio equipment now in use having extremely wide-band capabilites, surveillance frequencies no longer have to be close to normal operating frequencies, just within the band (e.g., 150-174 MHz, 450-512 MHz or 851-869 MHz). Some departments may use the repeater input frequency of a system for surveillance by disabling the tone that turns the repeater on.

WARNING! Since surveillance operations usually use low-power equipment, if you hear activity, it may be very close by. Stay away! Under no circumstances should you approach the location to try and get a view of what is happening. You could find yourself in very serious trouble!

Get Organized

Using POLICE CALL can help, but getting the most out of each new edition will take a little time. You should have a complete list of all the channels in your scanner. POLICE CALL has provided a Personal Log at the end of each volume. Enter the information in pencil so you can erase and replace data.

If your scanner has a hundred or more channels, and you have a computer with a data base program, you might want to consider two lists. One list would be arranged by channel # and one by user, in alphabetical order. If you plan to do a great deal of searching for new frequencies, you may also want to make a third list arranged by the frequencies you already know. Instead of the latter, use Part II of POLICE CALL to check off the stations you are familiar with.

Starting with POLICE CALL, read through the first column of the records in Part I ("NAME"). Make a list of all the frequencies that interest you. Then read through the second column ("TRANSMITTER CITY"), for all the places in your area, especially those under the name of your county and state. You may find some new systems that you did not recognize in the first column.

Each year, use the new edition of POLICE CALL to check your list, adding new records and deleting the ones no longer shown. When using a new edition of POLICE CALL for the first time, be especially careful with agencies having many records. The printing is admittedly small, and a few new records might easily be overlooked.

Building Up Frequency Banks

Your scanner channel banks, and the frequencies in each, should be planned for convenience, efficiency and speed of selection.

*Major Emergency Bank. Set up one bank of frequencies for major emergencies: hurricanes, tornadoes, earthquakes, airline disasters, etc. This bank should contain the primary frequencies that are most likely to be used in the event of a disaster, and might include:

- Law enforcement intersystem
- Mutual aid (including 155.475 and those in the new 800MHz band)
- Hospital-ambulance
- Civil Defense & Disaster (Emergency Management)
- Red Cross
- Highway maintenance
- Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA)

If your community is host to a major event, such as the Rose Bowl Parade, you should consider putting all the frequencies that will be used into a separate bank.

Ken Brown (Gloversville, NY) wrote to tell us that school bus frequencies are an excellent source of information on road conditions, and would also carry information about school evacuations in an emergency.

Local Emergency Bank. There may be instances when you wish to quickly access one or more special frequencies in a hurry because you've heard an emergency is in progress, sirens, a police helicopter, or a news flash. Several readers have sent in suggestions.

Peter Szerlag (Arlington, MA) tells us that he leaves the first three channels in his scanner open — that is, with no frequencies programmed. When alerted to an emergency, Peter quickly programs the relevant frequencies into those slots.

Jim Sponseller (Rochester Hills, MI) has a system he calls "un-delete." Jim places all the emergency channels he may want to access in one bank. He then locks them all out but includes the bank in his scanning program. Jim says it takes just a couple of seconds to unlock — "undelete" — the frequencies he wants during an emergency.

David Hanna (Nevada City, CA) puts frequencies used only in emergencies (fireground, chase, etc.) in a bank that is included in his scan program.

Mystery Bank. Here's a suggestion for handling the new frequencies you find in POLICE CALL each year, as well as existing ones that seem to have had no activity up to now. Set up one bank of channels on your scanner specifically for them. Each day, spend five minutes scanning your bank of "mystery" frequencies. Or, include them in your scan program. You never know when one of them will suddenly come alive: possibly at the same time that an old favorite goes dead. Licenses are often issued long before actual use.

Primary Bank. These are the channels you normally listen to. Personal choice will dictate how the balance of your frequencies are entered in your scanner. You may want to place the main frequencies that you regularly listen to in the first bank. Tactical and fireground frequencies would go into another bank that you could switch to when needed. Some users place law enforcement in one bank and fire/rescue in a second bank. Others intermix them. Experiment to see which is easiest for you.

Don't forget to include the aircraft emergency frequency, 121.5 (and 243.0 if you have that band), in your primary scan sequence. If you live near a military airfield, include the "fire/crash crew" frequency.

When a system uses a repeater, you need only monitor the base frequency and set the scanner delay "on." However, in many base repeater systems, the operator can disable the repeat function. If you find this is done in your area, put the mobile frequency in your primary bank, but keep it locked out of the scan pattern until you are made aware that the repeater is off.

For two-frequency simplex systems, you will have to put the base and mobile frequencies on separate channels, and turn the delay "off." Med 1-8 frequencies (see: inside cover) are used by paramedics, and usually in a semi- or full-duplex mode so that the doctor or the medical attendant may interrupt the other's conversation. You will need to plug in both frequencies of the channel. The Med 1-8 frequencies are often the bearers of "life and death" drama.

Search Mode

When looking for new frequencies, it is best to search in small segments. The more often you scan each frequency, the better the chances of hearing a short message that might otherwise be missed.

Remember that a scanner in "search" mode will stop on birdies, harmonics, intermod, etc. It will be necessary to push the "search" or "continue" key to resume the search. Always verify that the scanner has stopped on a valid frequency by looking it up in the Consolidated Frequency List in POLICE CALL. When you do locate a true frequency, you can use Part II of POLICE CALL to help identify the station.

Within the land-mobile bands, the various radio services are grouped together in sub-bands. The primary Public Safety sub-bands are:

- 30.8600-31.9800 C
- 33.0200-33.1000 M,R,S
- 33.4200-33.9800 F
- 37.0200-37.4200 L,P
- 37.9000-37.9800 M,R,S
- 39.0200-39.9800 P,L
- 42.0200-42.9400 P (state)
- 44.6200-46.5800 C,F,L,M,P,R,S
- 47.0200-47.6600 M,R,S
- 150.9950-151.4750 C,R
- 153.7400-154.4450 F,L
- 154.6500-156.2400 L,M,P,R,S
- 158.7300-159.4650 C,L,P,R
- 453.0125-453.9875 All
- 460.0125-460.6375 F,M,P,S
- 462.9375-463.1875 M
- 866.0125-868.9875 All

SPECIAL NOTES: For frequencies above 453.0000, only the base/repeater frequencies are shown. Between 453.0125-463.1875, frequencies ending in ".XXX5" are low power. These may be used for tactical purposes, fireground or surveillance. They are also used as control and fixed relay stations. Regardless of how they are used, the FCC licenses these low-power stations as "mobile units."

In major metropolitan areas, there are Public Safety Frequencies in the UHF-T bands, 470.0125-511.9875 (see: Consolidated Frequency List). Between 851.0125-865.9875, Public Safety systems are intermixed with other services.

Checking Your System

You probably live within range of one or more of the frequencies that broadcast continuous weather information: 162.400, 162.425, 162.450, 162.475,162.500, 162.525, 162.550. You may use them in experimenting with different antennas and placement, as well as the performance of your receiver. Note that atmospherics and time of day may affect reception of more distant stations.

When receiving weaker stations, your squelch control can serve as a crude signal-strength indicator. Most scanners include numbers or markers around the squelch knob. Note how far you have to turn the squelch to block out the received signal. It won't work the other way, as the settings will be different for locking out a signal, and then unlocking the squelch.

RADIO CODES

Codes and "signals" are used primarily for brevity and clarity, rather than secrecy. APCO suggests the use of some standard codes. It would be impossible to list all of the thousands of different codes and signals in use, so our list is limited to larger agencies.

Local codes may be available from your scanner dealer. The non-profit clubs, such as RCMA, Northeast Scanner News and All Ohio Scanner Club (listed at the beginning of this section) report many codes in their publications. They may also be able to put you in touch with other hobbyists in your area who are familiar with local codes.

As a last resort, you may be able to figure out most codes by careful listening and taking notes. Here are examples of how someone might begin deciphering Los Angeles Police codes:

- A police unit is dispatched to a "211," "code 3." Shortly thereafter, the unit calls in "description of the '211' suspect," adding that he used a gun and took money. A "211" is obviously a hold-up. Then it is noted that "code 3" is used for hold-ups, traffic accidents with injuries and other violent incidents. The conclusion, after eliminating other possibilities, is that "code 3" means "use siren."
- Every day, each unit reports "code 7" just one time. After exactly 45 minutes, the unit that reported a "code 7" reports back into service. It doesn't take a heap of brain power to figure out that "code 7" is "time-out to eat."

Many codes (such as some of those used in California) are based on the State Penal Code or State Traffic Code. Your local library should have copies of these laws.

Please do not write and ask us for codes and signals that are not listed. We don't have them!

BE PREPARED

During the past years, our nation has been ravaged by earthquakes, hurricanes, tornadoes and floods. These can strike any time and anywhere, without warning. Your home should be prepared for a worst case scenario: loss of all utilities, evacuation of structures and incapacitation of transportation.

You can minimize the adverse affects of a major emergency by having a "disaster plan" and a "survival kit." Every person in your household should know the plan and practice it, just as you should know what to do in case of fire.

Begin by making certain that your hot water heater is securely fastened to a wall, using steel tape or commercially available kits. In an emergency, it is a source of drinking water.

Locate the shut-off valve for the gas, and have everyone practice turning it off. Do the same for the master electrical panel.

Select the place you will all go to if your home must be evacuated in a hurry. It should be a location where there is no danger from collapsing structures and falling large trees, utility poles and overhead wires.

Assemble the kit of emergency supplies. The contents may vary depending on the type of climate you have and the potential dangers. They can be stored in a 32-gallon plastic garbage can. Keep it in a place that will be accessible even if the structure is damaged: a detached garage, shed or near the entrance to the building.

*Computer precautions. We don't have to tell you to always back up your computer files on floppies or tape. If you use your computer at work, take your backups home at night. If you use your computer at home, keep your backups in another part of your house, and where you can grab them quickly if you have to evacuate. When you go on vacation, give your backups to a relative or friend to protect them from a disaster at home.

And a final warning: Unless you need help or are officially involved in emergency operations, remain at your safe location.

BEFORE YOU WRITE...

We love to hear from you! Tell us what you like, or don't like, about POLICE CALL. Before you ask us a question, please read the Listener's Guide to be sure the answer isn't to be found there. We receive thousands of letters each year, but 90% ask the same six questions:

1. "Can you send me the frequency of...?"

What you see in POLICE CALL is all we've got. The only categories in our data base are the ones we feature (Public Safety). We print everything that's in the computer when we go to press. Between issues, we can't answer individual requests for frequencies not shown. Information on systems other than Public Safety — tow trucks, security guards, etc. — may be found in our other publication BEYOND POLICE CALL.

2. "Why can't I hear a frequency you listed, and why isn't a station I hear listed?"

We list those stations that are currently licensed by the FCC (see 7. FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION for a complete explanation). Some stations have not yet begun to use their licensed frequencies. Others may no longer be using a licensed frequency. If you hear a station that is not listed in POLICE CALL (Public Safety only), make sure it is not an "image," and then please tell us about it. We'll check it out.

3. "Why don't you include...?"

We had to draw the line somewhere. There are millions of licenses. We selected the Radio Services for POLICE CALL based on the greatest interest. Many other radio frequencies are to be found in BEYOND POLICE CALL.

4. "Is POLICE CALL available on disk?"

No. We have no plans to do so.

5. "Do you have information on brands of scanners and antennas, or how to repair scanners?"

No. Contact your dealer or the manufacturer.

6. "Why am I having a problem with.....?"

We don't do long-range diagnoses, and we don't make house calls. Would you write a letter to a doctor asking him why your throat hurt?

We want to hear from you! REMEMBER: If you want an answer to your letter, you must include a self-addressed and stamped envelope.

CONSOLIDATED FREQUENCY LIST

This list has been developed from FCC records and other sources. It is intended only as a reference: There is no assurance that all frequencies are in use, or are used for the purpose indicated.

Not all scanners are capable of receiving all the frequencies shown. Consult your owner's manual for the frequency ranges installed in your scanner.

NON-FEDERAL FREQUENCIES

Only primary allocations are shown. There may be secondary allocations outside of major metropolitan areas.

The FCC has authorized inter-service sharing (e.g., police use of an unused fire frequency) and some non-standard frequencies. A few stations, using amplitude compandered sideband (ACSB), also operate on non-standard frequencies.

Land-mobile frequencies above 450 MHz are — with certain exceptions — "paired," that is, a channel consists of two frequencies. One of the two frequencies for each channel is the base frequency (base, repeater, mobile relay and mobile), while the other is the mobile frequency (mobile and control station). A "*" indicates a frequency that is not paired. To avoid confusion, this list contains only the base frequency of each pair. Base-mobile spacing is as follows:

450-470 MHz. The mobile frequency is exactly 5.000 MHz higher than the base frequency (e.g., 451.300 base/456.300 mobile).
470-512 MHz. The mobile frequency is exactly 3.000 MHz higher than the base frequency (e.g., 471.3375 base/474.3375 mobile).
806-894 MHz. The mobile frequency is 45.000 MHz lower than the base frequency (e.g., 851.1125 base 806.1125 mobile).
935-941 MHz. The mobile frequency is 39.000 MHz lower than the base frequency (e.g.,935.1125 base 896.1125 mobile).

"[Lp]" ("low power") indicates that power output is limited to two (2) watts. All Lp radios are considered mobiles, even when used as a base station or repeater. Some Lp frequencies may be used for control or fixed relay.

"<x>" indicates an official or unofficial channel designation or number.

Remote Broadcast Pickup (BA) frequencies in the 450-470 MHz band may or may not be paired.

"Itinerant" frequencies are intended for use by organizations that relocate from time to time (e.g., construction firms).

Frequencies used exclusively for tone or digital data transmission have not been included.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FREQUENCIES

Federal records have not been available for a number of years. We have relied on the last available data, plus reports from readers. Therefore, U.S. Government frequencies (service codes beginning with "U") are strictly unofficial. They should be considered incomplete, at best. All VHF-low band allocations should be considered suspect.

Frequencies may be assigned on a local, regional or national basis.

RADIO CODES AND SIGNALS

The "aural brevity" code plans on the following pages are a representative sampling of the many codes in use. To list all of the different code plans would require a separate volume.

PHONETIC ALPHABETS

A phonetic alphabet is used to avoid any misunderstanding when spelling names or reporting vehicle license numbers. Two different systems are in common use:

A	Adam	Alpha
B	Boy	Bravo
C	Charles	Charlie(Cocoa)
D	David	Delta
E	Edward	Echo
F	Frank	Foxtrot(Fox)
G	George	Golf
H	Henry	Hotel
I	Ida	India
J	John	Juliette
K	King	Kilo
L	Lincoln	Lima
M	Mary	Mike
N	Nora	November
O	Ocean	Oscar
P	Paul	Papa
Q	Queen	Quebec
R	Robert	Romeo
S	Sam	Sierra
T	Tom	Tango
U	Union	Uniform
V	Victor	Victor
W	William	Whiskey
X	X-Ray	X-Ray
Y	Young	Yankee
Z	Zebra	Zulu

The following are comonly used in connection with vehicle accidents:

F	Fatality
PD	Property damage only
PI	Injuries

One definition has been standardized in our system: "Officer needs help." It indicates that the officer is in immediate personal danger ("help!") and requires all officers in the area to respond as quickly as possible. This should not be confused with "Officer needs assistance."

MOST COMMONLY USED CODES

1. Routine response
2. Urgent — No siren or flasher lights
3. Urgent — Use siren and flasher lights

These codes are not repeated, and should be assumed as used unless otherwise indicated. A semiofficial "expanded APCO" code is also included on the following pages.

The code systems listed were submitted by our readers. We assume they are accurate, but offer no assurance that they are accurate and/or complete. You are encouraged to submit additional code systems for the 1996 Edition of POLICE CALL. Because of space constraints, please limit them to cities with populations over 100,000 and counties over 200,000 population.

THE "POLICE CALL" STORY

POLICE CALL was "born" in Southern California in 1963, and there couldn't have been a worse time to begin such an endeavor. Until the mid-40's, most police broadcasts were on the low-frequency AM band, and monitoring was a popular pastime. When the switch was made to VHF and UHF, there were few receivers available for hobby use, and their performance left a great deal to be desired.

With the introduction of high-performance equipment, monitoring began to develop as a popular hobby, and Directory sales grew. In 1974, POLICE CALL was expanded to nine additional volumes covering the forty-eight contiguous States.

Gene Hughes, editor of POLICE CALL, traces his interest in monitoring to pre-war days, when the Los Angeles Police Department could be heard on 1.730 MHz., just above the AM broadcast band. This boyhood curiosity led to a career in consultation, systems design and sales of 2-way radio for commercial and Public Safety use.

POLICE CALL is the product of a combination of computer technology and thousands of hours of painstaking research. An important contribution comes in the form of thousands of helpful readers who furnish additional information and data: "I read every letter," Hughes says, "because I'm just a reporter of facts. Our readers are the experts."

A new edition of POLICE CALL is published every year, revised to show the tens of thousands of new licenses, additions and deletions that occur annually.
